U. S. Seeks Loan Of 900 Millions; Debt Will Climb

Bonds to Push Nation's Borrowings Above 30 Billions.

Follows Roosevelt Economy Pledge

Fund to Last 3 Months at Present Rate of Spending.

By Felix Bruner.

Secretary Morgenthau last night offered for subscription $900,000,000 in Federal securities to raise money to meet the work-relief load and for current expenses.

This loan, if fully subscribed, will increase the National debt to a new all-time high of about $30,500,000,000. The debt stood at $29,641,606,134 on November 27.

The new security issue was equally divided between 2¾ per cent bonds maturing in 1947, and five-year 1½ per cent Treasury notes.

In addition, Morgenthau offered holders of Treasury notes maturing December 15 the privilege of exchanging them either for the bonds or for the notes. A total of $418,000,000 in 2½ per cent notes will mature on that date.

To Increase Total.

The total of the new issue will be increased in proportion to the number of notes exchanged. A 100 per cent exchange would bring the new financing to $1,318,000,000. Experience has shown that exchange offers are accepted by about 80 per cent of note or bond holders. The notes not exchanged will be retired for cash.

The new financing will bring the total added to the national debt since the beginning of the Roosevelt Administration to about $9,500,000,000. At the beginning of the Administration the debt was about $21,000,000,000. The present debt compares with a debt of $25,482,000,000 at the close of the World War.

The new bonds are dated September 16, 1935, and will bear interest from that date. They will mature September 15, 1947, but may be redeemed at the option of the Government on or before September 15, 1935. The notes will be dated December 16 and will mature December 15, 1940. The bonds technically are an addition to the issue of September 15.

May Save Interest.

The provision for exchange of the notes maturing December 15 may or may not save the Government interest. On the basis of an exchange of all the notes for new notes, the saving would be $4,180,000, but on the basis of an exchange of the old notes for new bonds, the interest load would be increased $1,045,000.

The new increase in the public debt follows closely the speech of President Roosevelt in Atlanta Friday in which he said that the peak of appropriations had been passed and the country could look forward with assurance to a decreasing deficit. He indicated that expenditures would be closer to receipts and that a reduction in the debt would follow.

The debt still falls many billions short of reaching the figure the President said a group of bankers told him could be reached without impairing the Nation's credit. He said the bankers had told him in 1933 that the debt could be increased to $55,000,0000,000 or even $70,000,0000,000, but that he had no intention of pushing it to any such heights.

Expected by Bankers.

From New York, the Associated Press quoted leading Wall street bankers as saying they expected the market to absorb the new securities without difficulty. The terms of the securities followed closely the expectations of the street, and some bankers were quoted as saying they might command a slight premium.

Consensus of bankers, the Associated Press said, was that the banks probably will prefer the five-year notes, whereas insurance companies, savings banks and trust funds are expected to be the principal takers of the longer-term bonds.

It is unlikely, bankers said, that the recent plea for a boycott on Treasury issues by Orval Adams, second vice president of the American Bankers Association, will be answered when the books open today.

It was said in Wall street that the amount of money asked for was greater than had been anticipated.

The new financing comes as the work relief program gets completely under way. Spending on this program has been slow, but it is expected to pick up very rapidly within a few wekes, pouring millions of dollars into materials and into the channels of trade. The working balance of the Treasury is at the lowest point in many months, about $1,000,000,000. It usually is maintained at about $1,500,000,000.

The new issues will again increase the holdings by banks of Government securities, a situation that has been steadily increasing in importance. It is estimated that

Record of U. S. Debt Since Civil War Days

By the Associated Press.

The rise in the Nation's public debt since the Civil War is shown in the following table giving progessively high and low years:

June 30, 1861	$ 90,582,417
June 30, 1866	2,753,763,929
June 30, 1893	961,431,766
June 30, 1916	1,225,145,568
June 30, 1919	25,482,034,419
June 30, 1930	16,185,308,299
June 30, 1932	19,487,009,766
June 30, 1933	22,538,672,560
June 30, 1934	27,053,141,414
June 30, 1935	28,700,892,624
Nov. 27, 1935	29,641,606,134

The Treasury's December financing plans, announced yesterday, indicate that the debt will go to $30,500,000,000 during the month.

Talmadge Plans Anti-Roosevelt Campaign Tour

Georgia Critic to Answer the Atlanta Speech in N. Y. Talk Friday.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.
A Staff Correspondent.

Atlanta, Dec. 1.—Gov. Eugene Talmadge, sharp-tongued Georgia critic of the New Deal, today announced he was ready to make a national campaign "to discourage the idea of people looking to the Government for a living."

Talmadge told The Post's correspondent that he is prepared to respond to invitations around the country, from those in sympathy with his opposition to the New Deal, to arouse sentiment against Federal spending and "regimentation." He will answer the President's Atlanta speech in a Nation-wide broadcast from New York on Friday.

Political Conservative.

Sitting in the living room of the executive mansion, taking quick puffs from a cigar, and with a huge brass cuspidor at his side, Georgia's Governor ridiculed the Roosevelt claims that PWA funds were being used on "useful projects," charged the New Deal was "going toward worse than socialism and communism" and that AAA policies will make "peons out of the mass of American farmers if continued three more years.

Talmadge is neither a radical nor a left-winger. Although he was friendly with Huey Long, the only thing they had in common was their hostility to President Roosevelt. Talmadge is a political conservative of the type of Carter Glass and Albert C. Ritchie, although lacking the polish of these Democratic leaders.

Like those Democrats, he contends that a man cannot lift himself by his own bootstrap, that you cannot borrow yourself into prosperity and that the greatest service Government can give to its people is to "stay off their backs" and let them work out their own affairs.

Cut Georgia Expenses.

However much these principles may appeal to business and financial groups, it is doubtful whether Talmadge in any national campaign he may make will appeal to city voters. He is too much the "countryman" for that. Owner of a Georgia farm, he talks like a farmer, and although he has been Governor of the State almost three years, his appearance is that of a farmer dressed up in store clothes. The red galluses, his only eccentricity in dress, were not in sight today. His hands are those of a man who frequently engages in manual labor.

The Georgia Governor is not familiar with all the details of the New Deal. In conversation he frequently indulges in extravagant and incorrect statements, but he will not be corrected. He believes firmly

Only 57 File As SEC Ends Registrations

Judge Declares Listing Does Not Invalidate Utility Rights.

Eleven Major Companies Out of Fold, Suit Blocks Another.

By the Associated Press.

The first Federal court order favorable to the Government brought some cheer to the Securities Commission last night as it confronted an almost solid utility line-up against the holding company act.

With last midnight the deadline for registration of utility companies, only 57 were shown to have complied, and most of them said they were acting under protest or duress.

The number of companies refusing to register was not available, but they included most of the major systems, with their hundreds of subsidiaries.

The court decision was made last week by Federal Judge William H. Holly, of Chicago, but the first word of it reached the SEC when it was found attached to a registration statement of trustees for the reorganization of Public Utilities Securities Corporation.

Judge Holly, directing the trustees to register, upheld the commission's often-repeated contention that registration, in itself, would not impair the utilities' rights. One of the major utility arguments against registration has been that it was a legally dangerous step that might lead to their economic death.

Urges Reservations.

Judge Holly told the trustees to reserve full constitutional rights for possible resistance to future commission action, but this also conforms to suggestions made by the commission itself.

Eleven major systems have announced their refusal to register. Another—Columbia Gas & Electric Co.—has been prevented from registering by a stockholders' suit.

Others, including Niagara Hudson Corporation, Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, and Pacific Lighting Corporation, claimed exemption under the act on the ground their operations were predominantly intrastate.

Associated Gas & Electric Co., a major system, had not announced its intentions, but it was not a member of the group of companies which has fought the act. Some companies were taking no action waiting for the commission to move.

Insull Successor Files.

The major registration received yesterday as Securities Exchange Commisison headquarters kept open for last-minute compliance was by the Middlewest Corporation with 102 subsidiaries, formed only last week from the remnants of the once mighty Insull empire. New England Power Association, with 55 subsidiaries, and New England Public Service Co., 33 subsidiaries, were the next largest companies to register.

So far, 309 companies have asked exemption as intrastate concerns, or as companies in other industries which claimed their utility operations were only incidental in their total activities. This number probably would have been much larger had not the commission given temporary automatic blanket exemption to such companies recently without even the necessity of filing applications.

The registration to date included some companies subsidiary or affiliate to another, so that from the point of view of systems the number is smaller. Eleven major companies have announced refusal to register.

They are:

United Gas Improvement Co. of Philadelphia, Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, Consolidated Gas Co. of New York, Electric Bond & Share Co, North American Co., United Corporation, Standard Gas & Electric Co., Stone & Webster, Inc., American Water Works & Electric Co., Cities Service Co., United Light & Power Co.

These companies, except Electric Bond & Share, are seeking injunctions in Federal court to prevent enforecement of the act. The Government has brought suit against Electric Bond & Share to force it to register.

EMIL LUDWIG.

Ludwig Balks At Quiz, Causes Furor at Forum

Town Hall in Uproar as Nazi Foe Speaks His Mind on Europe.

Only restraint shown by panel members kept the second Town Hall meeting of the year from exploding last night. There were bitter verbal clashes, but no casualties, before the session ended.

Such much heat was generated by Emil Ludwig's refusal to answer questions of the two "Aryan" members of the panel that discussion was paralyzed, the speaker himself temporarily lost his command of the English language and even the amplifying system had a momentary attack of the "jitters."

The furor came immediately after Ludwig, the popular writer of historical biographies and a refugee from the Jewish persecution by Hitler, had finished a long lecture full of witicisms on "The Fate of Europe, 1914-40."

Proposes League Entry.

He predicted that America's strict neutrality policy will act as a spur to a union between militaristic Germany and Japan to rush Russia and then attack this country from both sides.

"The fate of Europe," he concluded, "thus lies in the hands of America. I am going to propose an unpopular solution to this chaos—that the United States enter the League of Nations."

This suggestion brought the only prolonged applause of the evening.

Then the microphone was turned over to a member of the panel, Frederick K. Kruger, author and professor of political science at Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio.

Ludwig Snubs Speaker.

In a short speech, Kruger caustically attacked Ludwig for "crystal gazing," and said that the present condition of Europe was not due to the militarism of the German people, but rather to the "peace that passeth understanding" at Versailles and the fact that the League of Nations has become "an iniquitous agent for keeping the status quo of the victor nations."

"I agree with Woodrow Wilson," he concluded, "when he said that peace and justice are twin sisters."

The eyes of the audience, which had jammed the ballroom of the Shoreham to capacity, turned on Ludwig for an answer. It came:

"I regret that I cannot answer the speaker, because I am a member of

Two Japanese Slain in China; Tension Rises

Killings Are Revealed as Last-Minute Peace Move Is Made.

Nanking's War Minister in Peiping to See Tokyo Envoys.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping (Monday), Dec. 2.—Chinese semiofficial sources said today two Japanese, advocating north China autonomy, had been slain by Chinese village residents east of Tientsin.

The report heightened the tension in the present crisis, the outcome of which was shrouded in deep uncertainty today because of a lack of co-ordination among the Chinese groups demanding autonomy. The two Japanese reported killed were said to have been beaten by aroused villagers at Tawangchwang, who had listened to them espouse the cause of the autonomists.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Tientsin (Monday), Dec. 2.—Gen. Ho Ying-Ching, Nanking war minister, has arrived in Peiping to conduct last-minute "peace" negotiations with Chinese leaders and the Japanese military, Japanese sources reported today.

Ho left Nanking at 10 p. m. Saturday by rail, it was reported.

He probably will see Maj. Gen. Kenji Doihara, political expert of the Japanese army, and Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, commander of the Peiping and Tientsin garrisons, immediately in an effort to work out a compromise and prevent a formal declaration of autonomy for the provinces of Hopei and Charar.

Opponents of the autonomy movement said Ho's mission means that Nanking intends to assert its sovereignty in North China "by every available means."

Submission Also Reported.

Proponents of autonomy said the mission means that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, Nanking chieftain, realizes that he must yield to the demands of the North China provinces and has secretly instructed Ho to accept the best compromise he can obtain.

Other week-end developments in the tangled North China situation included:

1. Gen. Han Fu-Chu, Governor of Shantung province, declared he will not support the autonomy movement and will remain loyal to Nanking.

British Enter Picture.

2. British interest in the North China situation again was made clear by a report from Singapore that Air Commodore Sydney Smith, commanding Royal Air Force units in the Far East, left today for Hongkong, British crown colony in South China. It was anticipated the commodore may recommend return of some of the British warships formerly stationed in Far Eastern waters. The bulk of these ships were withdrawn to the Mediterranean when the Italo-British situation became acute.

3. Charles James Fox, editor and publisher of the North China Star, one of the leading newspapers of North China, asked that a "committee of hard-boiled United States Senators" investigate the North China situation. In a signed editorial, the American editor said that a senatorial investigation is the only way Americans can learn "the hard and cold facts" about what is taking place. Fox believed that any effort to apply Occidental conceptions, such as the Kellogg pact, the nine powers' treaty and other peace instruments, would be useless. "No program of sanctimonious sanctions or pious pacts," will be of any use in con-

Maxwell Not Slain, Son Says; Boy May Escape Murder Count

A Staff Correspondent.

Pound, Va., Dec. 1.—Earl Maxwell was in New York when a telegram announcing the death of his father, Trigg Maxwell, came to him one Sunday morning last July.

The 31-year-old traveling salesman for a wholesale candy firm set out immediately for his home here to attend the burial and to comfort his widowed mother. He thought his father had died from apoplexy. But when he reached this little town, nestled in a pocket of the Cumberland Mountains, he found his sister Edith behind bars.

The young school teacher has been locked in a cell of the Wise County jail, 13 miles away, charged with the murder of Trigg Maxwell.

And so Earl Maxwell, who returned to the lonesome pine country intending to stay only a couple of days, is still here. A few minutes after his arrival he pitched Wise, Va., Dec. 1.—Commonwealth's Attorney Fred B. Greear said tonight he was not prepared to say whether he would seek a murder indictment against 16-year-old Haugeman Falin, held in Wise County Jail charged with the slaying of his father, Lilburn N. Falin.

Greear said he had not completed his official investigation of the case, and most of his information to date was from newspaper accounts of the case.

He added, however, that if these reports were accurate, the boy "seemed to have a good case of self-defense," inasmuch as it was reported necessary for the boy to visit a doctor and have a severe wound on his head stitched by a physician. The boy claimed the wound was inflicted by his father in the argument which preceded the shooting.

Dog-Fight in Pet-Shop Window Brings Out Police and Firemen

Pups and fire sirens interrupted the peace and quiet that reigned in F street yesterday afternoon.

Pandemonium broke when three young Boston bulls and a fox terrier agreed—not to be nice, cute puppies in a pet shop window—but to disagree.

Before the dispute was over 11 fire trucks had shrieked to position in front of a closed pet shop at 612 F street northwest. There also were two chiefs' cars, one fire rescue squad car, two police squad cars, one police patrol with rescuers, and one cruiser.

Just a few children saw the fight start. But as the free-for-all, with odds against the terrier, grew in fury, a crowd swarmed to look on. Men and women, as well as children, saw the terrier downed. They saw him bitten, pulled and yanked. Citizen witnesses dashed for phone booths. One called police.

"The firemen are quicker," said Mrs. Nan Warner, whose home is near the scene of battle, and she pulled the nearest fire alarm lever.

Soon there were firemen, policemen, detectives, plain-clothesmen, fire and police chiefs and Rescue leaguers. Officers of the law broke in a back door and saved the terrier.

Meanwhile, the proprietor of the shop, Harry M. Atherton, arrived. He could give police few excuses to the mystery.

"Those pups have been getting along just fine," he said. "They were in that front window together last Sunday, and there wasn't any trouble.

Italians Cold to Peace; Canada to Reject Part In Military Sanctions

King Repudiates League Envoy's Plan to Extend Embargo to Oil.

London Is Amazed At Dominion Action

Cabinet May Consider Matter at Special Meeting Today.

By the United Press.

Ottawa, Ontario, Dec. 1.—Canada tonight in an effort to dissociate itself from any proposal which might lead to war in Europe, publicly announced "that it does not recognize any commitment binding Canada to adopt military sanctions."

The announcement from the office of Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King emphasized that statements made at Geneva by Dr. W. R. Riddell, permanent Canadian representative at the League of Nations, concerning the embargo of key commodities like coal and oil to Italy "represented his own personal opinion and not the views of the Canadian government."

"The Canadian government," the statement said, "desires to make it clear that while the government supports economic sanctions against Italy it does not recognize any commitment binding Canada to adopt military sanctions. No such commitment can be made prior to its approval by Parliament."

The proclamation denied reports that the Canadian government had taken the "initiative" in the extension of the embargo to include key commodities like coal and oil.

London Is Amazed.

London, Dec. 1 (U.P.).—The Canadian government's disavowal of the Canadian League delegate's proposal that the League of Nations extend its embargo against Italy to oil, coal and metals—the threat of which has menaced the peace of Europe—amazed diplomatic quarters here tonight.

A special meeting of the British cabinet is expected to consider the statement, issued from the office of Canada's new Liberal prime minister, W. L. MacKenzie King.

The extension of sanctions to oil, coal and metals—all badly needed for Italy's military machine in Ethiopia—was introduced at Geneva by Dr. W. R. Riddell, permanent Canadian representative. It has been known as the Canadian proposal.

Officials declined to comment on the Canadian repudiation of Riddell's suggestion pending elucidation from Ottawa. Diplomats at first glance believed the statement was in effect a warning that Canada does not wish to be regarded as morally or automatically bound to aid Great Britain in event of an Italo-British war resulting from stiffening of sanctions.

May Go Too Far.

British commentators said this interpretation may go too far, but it is believed widely that the Canadian declaration is connected with Premier Benito Mussolini's reported diplomatic warning last week that oil sanctions would be regarded as a hostile act.

Diplomats who were at Geneva when the Canadian proposal was submitted believed at the time that Capt. Anthony Eden, of Great Britain, had persuaded Riddell to suggest the oil embargo.

It is believed here that since the League "general staff" of 18 has approved in principle the extension of sanctions suggested by Canada, the latter cannot now withdraw the proposal. Preparations for the oil blockade therefore may continue.

Effect of the Canadian statement upon tomorrow's cabinet meeting was uncertain. The government members had been expected to discuss a two-fold program. Curtailment of oil shipments to Italy and military, naval and aeronautical measures needed to safeguard Brit-

Italy Marshals Women of Land To Meet Siege

Warning Is Sent Out That All Parleys Do Not Mean Peace Talk.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Dec. 1.—Benito Mussolini, with bitter words of reproach for his former allies, put the mothers and widows of Italy's soldier dead in the "advance guard" of a women's army of defense against "hateful" sanctions today.

He exhorted 900 gold star mothers and World War widows to make those words "the watchwords" of all Italy, while an authoritative source warned against interpreting every diplomatic exchange between Italy, Great Britain and France as a "peace talk."

France and England, this source insisted, know what it is that Il Duce wants in Ethiopia.

"You have all the right and all the merit to constitute the advance guard of a feminine Italian army," Mussolini said, addressing the women in the Palazzio Venezia, "to which the regime has entrusted the task of reacting with system, with energy and with inflexibility against the hateful economic siege which surrounds Italy."

Assails "Geneva Experts."

Mussolini told the women Italy has sufficient raw materials to enable it to resist sanctions effectively. It is not the economic aspect that threatens injury, however, he said, but "the moral character."

When all is finished, he continued, "the marks these measures have left on our souls will be profound."

He ironically reproached Italy's war allies for having turned against Rome at Geneva. He said if the war mothers had been told, when they learned of their sons' deaths, "that one day the countries to which you had offered the youth of your sons would have furnished arms to the enemy fighting against Italian troops, you would have rejected the suggestion as one seeks to obliterate an evil dream."

He accused the "Geneva experts" of regarding Italy as a "laboratory specimen" on which "they can practice their cruel experiments with impunity."

As for hopes of peace, informed

Rome Refuses to Make Conciliation Gesture Laval Suggests.

England Is Ready For Oil Embargo

Baldwin Calls Cabinet; Sanctions Plan Held Up to League.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 1.—Diplomatic sources said tonight Premiere Pierre Laval had met a "blank wall' in his efforts to persuade Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy to make a peaceful gesture before December 12, that France might seek postponement of a League of Nations oil embargo.

Officials said hopes for a peaceful settlement of the Ethiopian war had dropped to a new low in view of the Italo-Ethiopian deadlock over oil sanctions and the tension in the Mediterranean Sea.

In diplomatic circles it was reported Mussolini not only had refused to halt his military advances into Ethiopia or to withdraw more troops from Libya, but also had repeated his warning that Italy would consider the oil ban an act of war and had threatened to send back the Libyan division he withdrew some weeks ago.

France Is Resigned.

Officials said France is resigned to the oil sanction, to be considered at a meeting of the League committee of 18 in Geneva December 12.

They were convinced that unless Il Duce shows a willingness to talk settlement before that date there will be little hope of bringing peace in Africa before spring.

Mussolini's refusal to make a friendly gesture before the committee meeting, it was thought, would assure Franco-British co-operation on the sanction.

If Mussolini does not make a pacific gesture, diplomats said, M. Laval will "leave the door for peace open" while confining his own efforts to keeping the African conflict from spreading to Europe.

Britain to Take Lead.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 1.—Competent observers believed tonight the British cabinet, summoned in significant session by Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, will formally decide tomorrow to take the lead at Geneva in dealing out the most drastic form of sanctions yet aimed at Italy.

These sources said Great Britain had drawn encouragement for the success of an oil embargo—to be considered by the League of Nations sanctions committee December 12—from hints that the United States would tacitly but none-the-less effectively join in such a move.

Nevertheless complications of the last 48 hours, arising from the apparent imminence of oil sanctions, led to a feeling of extreme uneasiness in some quarters for the fate of peace in Europe.

These complications included reports that Premier Benito Mussolini, in an implied warning to France, had withdrawn troops from the Brenner Pass toward the Italo-French frontier, and a somber warning from Italian delegates at Geneva that oil sanctions would be regarded as an "unfriendly act."

Some Hope of Surrender.

Hence some persons believed Baldwin and his ministers would be confronted tomorrow with the task of mapping British strategy in the event Il Duce, driven to the desperation by the stoppage of lubrication for his Ethiopian war machinery, should lash out at "unfriendly" countries.

On the other hand there was some hope, however, dim, that the Italian dictator may yield in the face of a newly solidified Franco-British united front.

This rapproachment was emphasized only last week by Premier Pierre Laval's direct notice to Italy that France definitely will support Great Britain in case of Anglo-Italian hostilities.

Soldier and Son, 3, Murdered At Langley Field; Youth Seized

By the Associated Press.

Langley Field, Va., Dec. 1.—Technical Sergt. Clem H. Kelley, 38, and his 3-year-old son, Clem H., jr., were shot and instantly killed in a burst of gunfire in the sergeant's quarters here tonight. A daughter, Irene Kelley, 8, received a bullet through the abdomen and is at Fort Monroe Hospital.

Military and civil officers confined 17-year-old "Buster" Russell, a nephew of Mrs. Kelley, in the post guardhouse after a preliminary investigation.

The commanding officer of the field informed the Department of Justice of the shooting and asked that an investigator be sent here from Washington, the local police said.

Mrs. Kelley and another daughter, Gertrude, 6, were not wounded.

The shootings occurred in the Kelley quarters about 6:30 p. m. Neighbors heard the shooting and notified military officers, who called in State and county enforcement officers.

On leaving the post the investigating officers said much mystery attended the affair. Deputy Curtis said Russell admitted firing the shot which killed the boy but declared that he ran out of the house before the others were fired. Conflicting statements and theories were expressed. Five bullets were fired, the officers said, four of which were recovered.

Kelley was shot through the right forearm, the bullet passing through his body. The boy was shot between the eyes.

Plays Politics On Bonus, Says Curran of Knox

Would Split Work Fund Between Two Parties, He Declares.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 1.—The opinion that Col. Frank Knox, Chicago, publisher, was "playing politics" with the veterans' bonus issue was expressed in an exchange of letters made public tonight by the National Economy League.

Henry H. Curran, director of the league, described Col. Knox's proposal to pay the bonus immediately out of the $4,800,000,000 Federal relief and works fund as a "sudden reversal" of his former position.

He also suggested that the proposal, if carried out, would have the effect of splitting the huge fund between the Democrats and the Republicans for campaign purposes.

Col. Knox, mentioned as a possible Republican Presidential candidate, had said in outlining his position that he was "entirely conscious of the fact" that prepayment of the bonus would "subtract $2,000,000,000 from the funds which Jim Farley is going to use to try to maintain the present Administration in office."

He said further it was "a normal certainty that the Democratic Party, with its record of spending behind it, will authorize prepayment of the bonus" when Congress reconvenes.

Advocates Payment.

"Under such circumstances," he wrote, "I am emphatically in favor of paying it at once and paying it out of the $4,800,000,000 fund, which would not necessitate additional taxes, additional bonds, or the issuance of paper money."

If the present Administration does not authorize prepayment and if it should be succeeded by a Republican Administration, he wrote, he would exert "whatever influence" he might have in favor of a policy of rigid economy "in every direction."

In such an event, he added, he would rely on "an overwhelming sentiment among men who served in the war in favor of co-operation with such rigid economy by deferring any demand for a prepayment of the bonus."

Curran Replies.

Replying, Maj. Curran said:

"If all the Republicans in the Congress vote for prepayment of the bonus—and you say you hope they will—doesn't it make this bonus look a little like a Republican campaign fund, in order to place a Republican administration in office, especially in view of the probability that President Roosevelt will veto any such measure and that the Republicans, once in office, will vote to override his veto and will possibly succeed?"

The letters disclosed that Col. Knox would not be available to speak at a dinner here in January, as the Economy League had planned.

Maj. Curran wrote the colonel that the latter's abandonment of his long-standing opposition to prepayment of the bonus had created a "problem" with respect to the dinner arrangements. Col. Knox replied that in view of their different opinions on the issue it was "a happy circumstance" that he would be unable to keep the engagement.

Oil Companies Asked For Embargo Stand

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—The People's League for Economic Security tonight announced it had asked 19 large oil companies for a statement of policy in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian conflict.

In a letter to the oil companies, Henry Pratt Fairchild, of New York University, league secretary, cited the Administration's neutrality stand and said: "The attitude of American oil producers and distributors must have a wide effect upon the outcome of the present clash between Italy and Ethiopia and the possibility of its spread to a much wider area or its recurrance within a few years as a more serious world crisis."

Musicians Vote Strike On WPA Projects in N.Y.

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—A strike of all musicians on WPA music projects, effective Thursday, was voted today by the local union of the American Federation of Musicians in protest against lengthened hours and the charging of admission fees to WPA performances.

The strike was voted by the general membership of Local 802, which has more than 700 of its 18,000 members on WPA music projects, after Director Nikolai Sokoloff, of the Federal music project, decreed new policies.

Between You and Me

Is He Squire Roosevelt or Comrade Roosevelt? "The Gay Reformer;" 1936 Fiscal Tactics.

By Raymond Clapper

IS President Roosevelt a velvet-gloved revolutionist insiduously attempting to introduce alien ideas of government into the United States? Or is he a country squire, inherently wedded to our present system of government and merely attempting to eliminate some of its imperfections?

Republicans for the most part picture him in the first role. Herbert Hoover is leading the campaign in building up the picture of Roosevelt, the sly revolutionist.

Roosevelt, as was apparent in his Atlanta speech, is setting out on his re-election venture trying to show himself in the latter role. He did not get down to making a bald description of the role in which he conceives himself to be acting. But it was implied in all that he said. His address steered clear of revolutionary suggestions. There was no hint of menace to private initiative and profits. Rather there was the promise that rewards would be more fairly distributed, that every effort was being made to improve the functioning of the American system, to give everyone his chance at the feed bag, and not to permit the stronger to get more than their just share. That is roughly the old familiar policeman theory of government.

Roosevelt sought to dramatize himself as a conservative in fiscal policy by telling the story about the bankers. There is a great deal of curiosity as to what particular "great bankers" could have, even in the desperation of 1933, told him that they thought a public debt of 55 to 70 billion dollars was safe for the United States. But the significant point is that Roosevelt told the story to show how cautiously he has played by refusing to go anywhere near the limit which the bankers are alleged to have thought safe.

That is one of the most significant tips as to the line of offense which Roosevelt is setting up for 1936.

Roosevelt as a protector of the present system is a contention which conservative spokesmen will resist vigorously.

But support for it comes from left-wing critics of Roosevelt. This is the theme of a book just published, "The Gay Reformer," by Mauritz A. Hallgren, an editorial writer on the Baltimore Sun. He is rather impatient with Roosevelt and finds him to be nothing more than an upholder of the present order. Roosevelt has been trying, the author says, to re-create in the modern and complex industrial society of America the pleasant human relationships that exist in the manorial community of Hyde Park.

"Objectively," Hallgren says, "his task has been to tide American capitalism over a particularly critical period, and to achieve this he has had to deal with hard realities that have forced him to shift and maneuver with a frequency disturbing both to 'business confidence' and to the liberal intellectuals who would make America over into something they call the 'social state.' * * * He has induced the capitalist state to yield a number of purely defensive concessions to the lower classes. There can be little doubt as to his sincerity in wanting to help them; yet, objectively, these concessions have come just at a time when American capitalism would seem to need the continued support of the masses."

Roosevelt seems to have succeeded in displeasing both extremes.

Political Parade: Not much has been heard for a long time from former Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart, Iowa Republican. An insurgent Republican during the Coolidge-Hoover days, his constituents mowed him down in the primaries just before the New Deal was born. But he may attempt a comeback soon. He hears calls from Iowa for him to run either for Governor or Senator, and he isn't trying to discourage them. . . . As between Roosevelt and Borah, Senator Norris says he would support Roosevelt. With any other Democrat up, he would back Borah for President. He is for both of them, but doesn't favor changing horses next year. . . . Hoover workers are reported to be lining up delegates in the Southwest. His Washington lookout and former White House secretary, Lawrence Richey, recently called on Gov. Harold Hoffman of New Jersey to size up what sort of intentions Hoffman has with regard to the Republican Presidential fight.

The New Deal has penetrated into "darkest Tennessee," into the town of Dayton, where ten years ago young Johnny Scopes was convicted of teaching evolution to his high school students.

TVA power is going into Dayton and the Rural Electrification Administration is financing 40 miles of transmission lines around the county to bring electricity into the isolated farmhouses.

What would the late William J. Bryan think about that? The three-time Democratic Presidential candidate went to Dayton to prosecute young Scopes for teaching evolution and wound up by defending the whale that swallowed Jonah against the scoffing of the Atheist Clarence Darrow. Bryan became a local hero. A university was erected in his memory there to carry on the fight against the wicked who claim monkey ancestry. Now the New Deal is giving those people good light so they can sit up late at night and read. It's exposing them to temptation.

Another Republican Presidential candidate has followed Herbert Hoover's example and hired a ghost writer. If enough Republican candidates do likewise, they can give work to all the idle press agents who were not hired by the New Deal.

Plans Are Made For Drastic Cut In CCC Total

Camp Enrollment Is to Be Reduced to 300,000 From 478,000.

Twenty-four hours after the Administration ended the direct dole by distributing to 22 States their final allotments totaling $93,794,192 for direct relief, plans were announced yesterday for a drastic reduction in the number of men in CCC camps.

This reduction, which follows plans previously announced by President Roosevelt, will cut the present approximate strength from the present figure of 474,000 to about 428,000 in January and gradually to a relatively permanent level of 300,000 men by next July.

Relief Progress Shown.

Simultaneously, Harry L. Hopkins, head of the FERA, made public a statistical pamphlet in which it was estimated that unemployment had been decreased 3,000,000 during the first two years of the Roosevelt Administration. The pamphlet, an elaborate booklet printed in two colors, showed relief activities by means of charts. The charts indicated that 12,000,000 people were out of work last March, compared with 15,000,000 at the peak.

The charts, prepared by the committee on national security, indicated that last May every seventh persons was on relief, one out of every six city dwellers and one out of every eight rural inhabitants. It was estimated that one-sixth of the urban relief cases were unemployables.

The amounts of the dole in various sections were shown as follows: New England, $45 per family; Northeastern States, $32.50; Central and Mountain States, $22.50; Pacific Coast, $42.50; Southeastern States, $17.50.

PWA to Absorb Cut.

The cut in CCC enrollment will immediately reduce the number of persons to whom relief jobs have been given, as the camp enrollment is included in the total of 3,500,000 who are at work. The reduction is expected to be absorbed, however, as the heavy construction work of the PWA gets under way.

Taking the CCC as a rough barometer for the revival of industry, Robert Fechner, director of emergency conservation work, announced that more than 88,000 young men and war veterans had left the camps to accept private employment from April to October, inclusive. Monthly figures follow a rising curve, which started with 8,505 in April and reached 13,860 in October, only slightly down from the seasonal peak of 15,851 in July.

Officials point out that the transfer of America's unemployed from direct Government support through the dole or CCC camps will be cushioned by many factors. As a result of the final allotment of $93,794,192 in dole money on Friday, all States now have undistributed dole funds ample to last for many weeks, until the work relief program has absorbed their employables and until local authorities have made provision to care for about 4,000,000 unemployables—the crippled, blind, widows with dependent children and others unable to work. Even these will receive Government aid when the Administration's social security program begins to operate.

banks are holding more than half of the Federal debt. In addition, it is estimated that banks hold most of the $4,500,000,000 in guaranteed securities, to which President Roosevelt referred in his speech as "recoverable assets."

The new issues bring the total borrowings since the beginning of the fiscal year last July 1, to $1,700,000,000. This would leave, according to estimates made by the President, about $862,000,000 to be borrowed during the remainder of the fiscal year.

This estimate, however, was based on the assumption that all the relief appropriations would be spent this year. It is now becoming apparent that this will not occur, and that a considerable part of the appropriation will be available after July 1.

Government expenditures since the start of the present fiscal year have totaled $3,129,231,338 and revenues have amounted to $1,454,369,066, leaving a current deficit of $1,674,862,272. This means that the Government is now spending about $300,000,000 a month more than its income, indicating that at the present rate, the new money would last about three months.

Another note issue of $558,819,200 falls due on April 15, when the next Government financing is expected. In addition, $50,000,000 in short-term bills fall due each week, for which it is expected the Government will sell new ones.

Appropriations Hearings Slated For This Week

Buchanan Declares All Bids Will Be Held to Minimum.

By the Associated Press.

Congressional sub-committees will open hearings this week on departmental appropriation bills for the financial year beginning next July 1.

Chairman Buchanan (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Appropriations Committee, who recently conferred with President Roosevelt on the budget, plans to lay these bills before the returning Congress at the rate of one a week.

Representative Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana, heads one group which tomorrow will begin consideration of the Treasury-Postoffice bill, largest of the nine regular departmental measures. Another subcommittee, under Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, will take up the independent offices bill on the same day.

Will Hold to Minimum.

Both sub-chairmen, as well as Buchanan, have declared their intention to hold every possible figure to a minimum. Last year the Treasury-Postoffice bill called for $901,420,053, but $2,000,000 more was added in Congress. The independent offices bill appropriated $777,501,956.

By December 9, the long grind of listening to departmental chieftans argue their need for funds will get under way in earnest, with hearings starting on either the War or Agricultural Department bills.

Buchanan said yesterday he did not see how the current allowances of $400,000,000 for the War Department and $460,000,000 for the Navy could be cut, but he asserted there "will not be a cent more."

Bill a Week His Goal.

Although Buchanan's goal is to get one money bill a week through the House in the first five weeks, his committee first must prepare a deficiency bill to replace the $100,000,000 measure which died in last session's closing filibuster.

This will supply funds for social security grants to States and for other new agencies. Buchanan estimated that not more than two-thirds the amount provided in the old measure is needed now. He also disclosed that his aim was to allow only enough funds for the first part of the year, and then put through another deficiency bill at the end of the session.

Pledge Violation Charged to Japan

Textiles Flood Philippines, Mrs. Rogers Declares.

By the Associated Press.

A charge that Japan already was violating through subterfuge its "gentlemen's agreement" with the United States to restrict its textile exports to the Philippines was made yesterday by Representative Rogers (Republican), Massachusetts.

Noting published reports from Tokyo that this country had called the attention of Japanese Ambassador Saito to Philippine imports of Japanese cotton goods, totaling 26,000,000 square meters for the three months ended October 31, Mrs. Rogers declared in an interview:

"When the United States-Japanese agreement concerning the Philippines was made, I called attention to the danger of Japanese cotton goods entering the Philippines from Chinese ports under the guise of merchandise from that country.

"It appears that my prediction has been fulfilled. There is no question that Japan is blazonly ignoring the agreement by subterfuge and always intended to get around it."

Talmadge Plans Anti-Roosevelt Campaign Tour

that the New Deal has turned out to be a hot-bed of evil and that it should be voted down.

He explained that when the President was elected in 1932 he was greatly pleased because Roosevelt was a Democrat, secondly because he was a part-time resident of Georgia, but most important of all, because Roosevelt had pledged himself so firmly to reduce Federal expenditures at least 25 per cent.

"That was a plank in my platform too," asserted the Governor, "and I set to work to do it. I cut the State tax on real estate by one-fifth, I gave the people $3 automobile tags and made reductions along the line. The counties of the State made similar reductions, so that here in Georgia we've had a cut of around 25 or 30 per cent in all local taxes. We cut expenditures, kept paying off our debt and we're getting along all right.

Time to "Speak Out."

"Roosevelt, however, started increasing expenditures instead of reducing them. He has given the people of this country the false idea that they should look to the Government for a living and unless something is to happen worse than has happened, the country will have to be discouraged out of that idea."

Talmadge was asked whether his own budget balancing task had not been made easier by "the help given to Georgia by the Federal Government."

"The Federal Government isn't helping here or anywhere else," he exclaimed. "It is not giving us anything. It is only giving back to us one-third—no, just about one-fourth—of the money it takes away from us in taxes, now and later on. Why, we paid $29,000,000 in income taxes to Washington last year. I reckon processing taxes on cotton alone amounted to sixteen or eighteen millions. I'm not mentioning taxes on peanuts, tobacco, grains—on everything."

Talmadge said that he believed the President when he said the best way to recovery was to reduce the cost of Government and let industry go ahead. During almost two years of the New Deal, he said, he was "willing to make allowances and to bite my tongue." But, he added, the President's request for a $4,800,000,000 relief fund a year ago was too much for him and he decided "it was time for somebody to speak out." Ever since he has criticized the New Deal.

"Mushroom Prosperity."

He assailed the Bankhead cotton control act, which he is fighting in the Supreme Court, as "unneeded regimentation" and the AAA as a "patronage machine."

"They say these measures are needed to restrict surpluses," he asserted. "But we haven't any surpluses. We are importing from foreign countries things we are restricting. Even cotton goods imports from Japan have increased greatly in the last year.

"These crop allocations don't help the little farmer. They take all the initiative out of him and all the pleasure out of his work. It is the crooks, the liars who say they planted more last year than they did and this year plant more than they promised to."

The Governor was asked whether it were not true that unmistakable signs of returning prosperity in Georgia were visible on every hand. The Atlanta newspapers today carried reports of the local Federal Reserve Bank showing economic improvement all along the line.

"Prosperity," sputtered the Governor. "It's mushroom prosperity—all on the top. What has happened to the share-croppers? They perished them to death with all these laws. The landlords have taken the benefit checks and have driven the share-croppers off the land to go on relief rolls in the cities. The same thing has happened to the tenants.

"I tell you, the working people of Georgia and every other State are catching more hell right now than they ever caught in their lives.

Spending "Tomfoolery."

"They talk about prosperity and spending Government money on useful projects. A lot of this prosperity they talk about has come from putting men on Federal pay rolls and they do about an hour's work and then spend the money. Why, they have college graduates around here poking into everyone's field catching rats—catching rats that never did any harm and that the hawks would get anyway. Why, over around Macon they had 35,000 rat traps. And every half dozen of these rat catchers have a boss, and he has a head boss and if they catch three rats they all go up to town and boast about it.

"They are spending money for putting buoys up your way, I'm told, to give the geese flying South a place to rest, but the geese, who have been flying South for a good many years and always taking care of themselves, won't light on the buoys. How about that study they are making into the historic background of safety pins? And they call these things "useful projects." Pshaw!

"I guess I am a just radical because I believe all that is a lot of tomfoolery."

Scene of Death Of Loring Girl Attracts Crowds

Lieut. Itzel Back Today to Continue Inquiry, Apparently Stalled.

Lonely Saddleback Ridge in Mount Rainier, where Corinna Loring met a brutal death a month ago tonight, still is a magnet for the curious, although the investigation of her murder appears, for the time being, to be at a dead-end.

Yesterday hundreds of persons, most of them motorists from Washington, visited the bleak, pine-covered spot where the bride-to-be was battered over the head and then garroted with wrapping cord.

As usual there were volunteer barkers to point out the place where the body of the stenographer was found on November 9, five days after she disappeared from home.

Beech street, usually quiet on Sunday, also was heavy with traffic yesterday as motroists drove by to view the Loring bungalow.

Itzel Returns Today.

Lieut. Joseph H. Itzel, the Baltimore detective in charge of the murder investigation, spent the week-end with his family. He will return to Upper Marlboro, the inquiry headquarters, today and resume what has now become a grim and apparently long-drawn-out hunt for the killer.

Itzel makes no pretensions that he has made any progress, but neither does he appear to be pessimistic. He does not believe that the perfect crime has ever been committed.

Robert W. Hicks, District criminologist, continues analyzing evidence in the case.

Virtually Cleared.

Victor H. Redmond, 42-year-old lunch-room employe, who is in jail at Upper Marlboro on a charge of attempted assault on a small Mount Rainier girl, has virtually been cleared of any connection with the Loring mystery.

Hicks said last night that the stains found on Redmond's car were not caused by blood.

The town council of Mount Rainier will hold its regular meeting tonight and probably decide definitely on whether to offer a $500 reward for information leading to the capture of the murderer. Whatever action it takes will depend on the views of Lieut. Itzel.

There are some who think the posting of a reward might lead cranks to flood the investigators with worthless tips.

a race that is not recognized by the Aryans. Therefore I cannot talk with an Aryan."

Frank Bohn, chairman of the emergency committee for relief of political and religious refugees from Nazi Germany and a member of the panel, came belligerently to Ludwig's defense and asked Kruger:

"Do you defend the Nazi regime?"

Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution and chairman of the meeting, tried to avert further strife by turning over the microphone to another panel member, Lowell J. Ragatz, associate professor of modern European history at George Washington University, in an attempt to "broaden the discussion."

But it was useless. After Ragatz predicted that the "rising black menace" soon would rule the world, Ludwig came back with a sarcastic rejoinder, although Ragatz' remarks were not directed at him, and completely ignored the fifth member of the panel, Frederick Auhagen, formerly of the University of Gottingen, when he attempted to say that Hitler had done more for European peace since 1918 than any other man.

In his prepared address Ludwig continually drew laughter from his audience in comparing the French and German temperament, blaming the latter's love of war, tragedy and a hero's death for the rise of Hitler.

The fate of dictatorship in Europe today, he predicted, depends on whether the democrats are stronger than the dictators.

"The question is whether revolution by the masses will rise from war or war from revolution," he added, saying that he believed the former.

Scientists Prepare to Test Beam 14 Times as Lethal as X-Rays

Neutrons So Powerful Approach Within 50 Feet Is Deemed Unsafe; No Shield Known to Stop Them; Control Equipment Is Ready.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Berkeley, Calif., Dec. 1.—The set-up for man's first experiments with a ray 14 times more lethal than X-rays, so powerful that approach is unsafe in any direction at less than 50 feet, is ready for work at the University of California.

The ray is a powerful beam of neutrons, the ultimate particles of atoms discovered four years ago by English scientists.

The first sizable beam of these neutrons is produced here in the heart of a magnetic field of an 80-ton magnet by a method discovered by Prof. E. O. Lawrence, of the University of California.

Involved, though at present unpredictable, are possibilities for medicine, alchemy, chemistry and industry. The neutrons, streaming in all directions from the big magnet are not stopped by any known type of shield, not even by lead.

They pass through the yard thick metal coils of the big magnet like so much paper. Water is better than anything else as a protection. It slows them down.

Remote Control Set Up.

To experiment in safety the California physicists have set up a remote control panel 50 feet distant from the magnet. A microphone broadcasts instructions from the panel.

The ray pilot sits there, at his hand a switch controlling a 12,000-volt electrical current, which produces, in a pill-box metal "tube" set between the great magnet poles, a 4,500,000-volt beam of neutrons. In this transformation an energy of 12,000 volts is stepped up, in another form, to 4,500,000.

The neutron beam is controlled as easily as an electric light. It goes on or off instantly with a turn of the switch under the pilot's hand. On a ground glass scale the pilot watches a moving spot of light, the size of a quarter, which indicates the voltage of the distant neutron ray.

Water Tanks Planned.

Between the control board and magnet tanks of water are planned, set so that a wall of water 3 feet thick interposes between magnet and control panel. The water is added protection against the ray.

Small quantities of neutrons continue far past the 50-foot safety zone. They penetrate everything for blocks around. Presumably they drive deep into the earth under the magnet.

The danger zone was found by experiments with rats. An animal spending an hour an inch or two from the neutron pill box suffered a white blood cell count drop from 10,000 down to 2,000.

Two hours of similar exposure always killed the rat within 48 hours.

This destruction of white cells is 14 times faster than that caused by X-rays from a 900,000-volt tube. Seven units of neutrons did the destruction work of 100 units of X-rays.

Effects Different.

But the neutrons are not merely more powerful destroyers than X-rays. Their effects are different. Rats, for example, dying of X-rays, were unmarked. Those killed by neutrons developed ulcers.

A theory partly confirmed may explain this difference. Both X-rays and neutrons are believed to destroy living cells by setting off within them explosions, or bombardments of atomic particles.

The X-rays cause bombardments of electrons, very light weight particles. Neutrons are thought to release a barrage of heavy particles, called protons, each one nearly 2,000 times more massive than an electron.

The California neutrons and X-rays both inhibit growth of wheat seedlings. But the neutrons are 20 times the more effective.

Place a silver dollar 12 feet from the beam's pill-box and in two minutes the coin is radio-active. It is like a piece of radium, except that its rays are extremely weak. The neutrons transform a little of the silver into a different kind of chemical element, which disintegrates, giving off radium rays as it does so.

Bandits Raiding Chicago Yacht Routed in Battle

Gun Fight Blocks Attempt to Rob Two Mandels, Rich Merchants.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—Two masked gunmen were beaten off in a wild gun battle early today after they had attempted to rob two of Chicago's ranking merchants.

The spectacular skirmish occurred in the gloom of the Chicago riverbank, east of Michigan boulevard. One of the gunmen was believed to have been wounded.

Leon and Frederick Mandel, brothers who operate a large State street department store bearing their name, and their wives were the intended victims. Returning from a hotel at 3 a. m., their chauffeur drove their limousine to the Goodrich docks, where Leon's yacht, the Buccaneer, was moored. Leon and his wife live aboard the 135-foot vessel. A spotlight of another car was trained on them. A masked gunman approached. He opened the tonneau door and said:

"This is a stickup. Act nice and you won't get hurt."

Jack Breezley, quartermaster, rushed out on the gangplank of the yacht, levelled a pistol and ordered the robbers to raise their hands. Instead, one of the gunmen dragged Mrs. Frederick Mandel from the limousine, held her in front of him as a shield and sent three bullets at Breezley.

Mrs. Mandel turned on her captor and dug her fingernails into his face. He cursed and let her go. She fell to the ground and lay there as the quartermaster and the gunman emptied their weapons at each other. Two of the slugs struck the pilothouse near Breezley's head.

The gunman then ran to the car where his companion awaited. The latter opened fire as they raced off. Frederick Mandel pulled a revolver from a pocket of the limousine and discharged all its bullets at the retreating machine.

Capt. Charles Olson and 11 members of the yacht's crew, awakened by the furor, rushed up to the deck in time to see the hoodlums disappear in the waterfront darkness.

Mrs. Frederick Mandel said she saw one of the bandits slump down in the seat of his car as though wounded after being pulled into the machine by his confederate.

Mrs. Fowler's Rites To Be Held Today

Silver Hill Resident Lived in D. C. 10 Years.

Funeral services for Mrs. H. Elizabeth Fowler, 58, wife of Clarence L. Fowler, who died Friday at her home in Silver Hill, Md., will be held today at 3 p. m. at the residence, with the Rev. Lewis F. Havermale, pastor of Bell's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Camp Springs, officiating. Burial will be held Tuesday at Harsham, Pa.

Mrs. Fowler died of heart trouble, following an illness of several months. A native of Harsham, Pa., she resided in Washington for ten years before moving to Silver Hill eight years ago. She was treasurer of the Prince Georges County Federation of Women's Clubs and a past matron of Marlboro Chapter, No. 61, Order of the Eastern Star.

Surviving Mrs. Fowler, besides her husband, are a daughter, Mrs. George C. Braswell, of Baltimore; a brother, Chalkley Stackhous, and a sister, Mrs. Anna Thompson, both of Harsham, Pa., and a granddaughter, Marie Elizabeth Braswell.

Services Today For Nancye Lake

Native of Front Royal Died at Home Yesterday.

Miss Nancye Virginia Lake, native of Front Royal, Va., and for 15 years an employe of the District Public Employment Service here, died yesterday at her home, 1800 Lamont street northwest.

She was a member of the Zonta Club and active in social work. Surviving are four sisters, Mrs. Walter Lempke, Nellie Lake, Mrs. F. A. Johannecht and Mrs. William Cann, and three brothers, Charles, Giles, and Markwood Lake.

Funeral services will be held at her residence tomorrow at 11 a. m. The burial will be in Front Royal.

Keep Furnace Going! Cold Snap. Forecast

Washingtonians may keep the great coats out and bank the furnace fires high for the Weather Bureau last night was expecting a cold snap.

The forecast for today was fair but colder. During last night the Weather Bureau thermometer fell to an official low of 32, two degrees below the lowest point reached in the previous 24 hours.

In the suburbs it was much colder. No snow was reported in the Washington area though bureau observers saw light flurries at several Pennsylvania observation points, including Harrisburg, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Yesterday was comparatively mild, the Weather Bureau recording the day's high of 46 at 1 p. m. By sundown, however, the bureau theremometer was sliding back to the thirties.

At 3 p. m. it had rechead 44. It was three degrees lower at 6 p. m. The 10 p. m. reading was 35.

Writ Granted Against Prison Goods Statute

Shirt Factory Is Winner of First Tilt in Battle Over Validity.

By the United Press.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 1.—A Nashville manufacturing company tonight was winner in the first skirmishes of an attack on constitutionality of the congressional act allowing States to prohibit interstate transportation of prison-made goods.

Federal Judge John J. Gore handed down an interlocutory injunction forcing the Louisville & Nashville, the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis and the Tennessee Central Railroads to accept prison-made shirts for interstate transportation.

The injunction was sought by the Huffines Shirt Co., of Nashville. Judge Gore allowed the injunction, taking the challenge of the act's constitutionality under advisement and requiring the shirt company to post a bond of $1,000 in each of the three cases.

Charles I. Dawson, recently resigned Federal judge of Louisville, Ky., chief counsel for the Huffines Co., charged the act is unconstitutional.

Frank Walker, Chess Master, Is Dead at 78

Retired Federal Official Was City Champion Several Times.

Chess champion of Washington several times, Frank B. Walker, 78, a retired Government employe, died Saturday of pneumonia in George Washington University Hospital.

A law graduate of Georgetown University, Mr. Walker was a Federal employe for more than 40 years. When retired in 1929 he was an official of the Interior Department Bureau of Indian Affairs.

He was District chess champion from 1896 until 1900 and from 1927 until 1931. He often was champion of the Home and Capital City Chess clubs and played on a Washington team against London experts in 1928 and 1930.

Long active in the affairs of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, he served successively as steward, treasurer and trustee.

Mr. Walker is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Lawrence T. Washington and Mrs. Maurice W. Fillius, both of this city; a sister, Mrs. Edward Phillips, of Los Angeles, and two brothers, William B., Lakeport, Calif., and Albert, San Francisco.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. from Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church. Burial will be at Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Burial Lot Sought For Stroke Victim

Police to Provide Funeral for Henry Thomas.

Henry Thomas, 68, died Friday at Casualty Hospital. He was penniless and had suffered a stroke while picking up coal along railway tracks at Thirteenth and M streets southeast.

Yesterday his acquaintances and members of the Fifth Police Precinct were trying to get aid so that he would have proper burial. They had made funeral arrangements and lacked only a place for interment.

Mr. Thomas leaves his wife, Mrs. Bessie Thomas. They lived together at 1359 K street northwest. Mrs. Ada Minnix, of 122 Third street southeast, who does volunteer social work in the Fifth Precinct, hopes someone may donate a place for him to lie.

Cutter Goes to Rescue Of Pleasure Schooner

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 1 (AP).—The Coast Guard cutter Sebago left here this afternoon for a point 200 miles east of Cape Hatteras, where the auxiliary schooner Theresa White was reported leaking and rudderless.

The vessel was sighted by the tanker Pan Bolivar, but whether she was standing by the helpless craft Coast Guard headquarters was unable to say. It was presumed, however, that she is at the scene.

The Theresa White was bound for Miami from New York and is said to have a party of friends of her owner, Henry L. Van Der Hofer, aboard. The vessel was built in 1905 at Friendship, Me. She is only 46 feet long and is listed to carry one man as her crew.

Horace Loeb, Banker.

Philadelphia, Dec. 1 (AP).—Horace Loeb, member of the investment banking firm of Newburger, Loeb & Co., died today at his home here. Loeb, who recently celebrated his sixty-eighth birthday, was born in Philadelphia and attended the public schools and Swarthmore College.

Captured Guns Mostly British, Italians Charge

England Called Greatest Aid to Ethiopia; New Battle Awaited.

By the Associated Press.

Asmara, Eritrea, Dec. 1 (AP).—The greatest part of the arms, munitions and war materials captured by the Italian forces in their advance on the Somaliland front were of British manufacture, it was stated today in the official communique on the Somaliland operations.

"The booty taken," the statement added, "confirms aid of every kind which the Ethiopians have received from England. In all operations so far the greatest part of the arms, munitions and materials captured were of British manufacture."

Reports to military leaders here indicate there is a growing concentration of Ethiopians beyond Ambi Alaji, 20 miles south of the Italian front line beyond Makale. Supplementary reports are that additional Ethiopian forces are marching north on Ambi Alaji.

Positions Fortified.

Like Aduwa, Ambi Alaji is a city of vengeance for Mussolini's forces. It was there, December 7, 1895—40 years ago— that native forces wiped out 2,000 Italian troops under Maj. Toselli, and the present army has marked it for the end of its "sentimental journey."

In preparation for the march on the city, which occupies a 10,000-foot height on the mountain ridge known as Ambi Alaji Pass, the Italians have fortified their positions. The native corps has mopped up Ethiopian troops around Tembien and the right flank, and Danakil tribesmen have driven them off the left flank.

Military leaders could gain no confirmation of news published abroad that Ras Seyoum, enigmatic Ethiopian leader, had been killed in recent fighting.

The belief persists, however, that Ras Desta, who had assumed the offensive in the Dolo region, has been squelched.

Railway Sale Rumored.

By the United Press.

Djibouti, French Somaliland, Dec. 1.—It was rumored persistently in responsible circles tonight that Emperor Haile Selassie has sold the Ethiopian shares of the Djibouti-Addis Ababa Railway, amounting to 25 per cent of the road's capital, to a British concern against an important shipment of arms and ammunition.

If the rumors are accurate, the British hold on the railway has been strengthened greatly.

Greek King Clears Leaders in Revolt

Amnesty Decree Orders Property Restored.

By the Associated Press.

Athens, Dec. 1.—Participants in the abortive Greek revolt of last March were released today following publication of a royal decree of amnesty, but King George II specified that "persons considered dangerous" may be confined, if necessary, to certain localities.

The fortunes taken from leaders of the revolt will be returned, the King said, "except for those acquired in immoral ways." The ministries of war, finance and the interior will determine what fortunes are to be restored.

Former President Zaimis, in his first statement since he was forced to retire to make way for the return of King George, urged all Greeks to "co-operate with the King."

Gen. George Kondylis, former premier regent, who lost a battle of wits with the newly returned monarch over the amnesty decree, was reported indisposed at his home. His followers expressed great disappointment in the new cabinet, headed by Constantine Demerdjis.

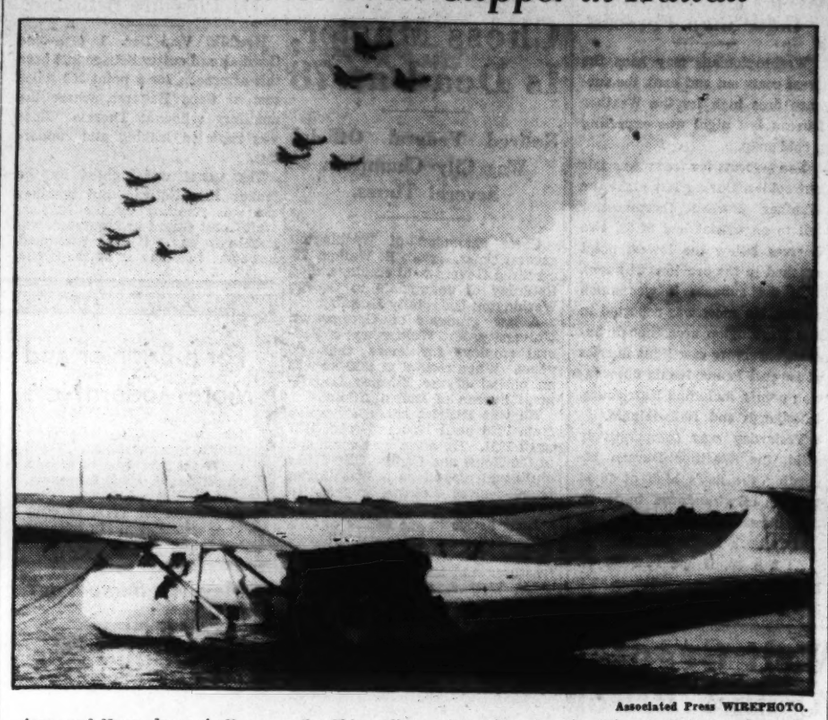
Service Planes Greet Clipper in Hawaii



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Army and Navy planes circling over the China Clipper just after the big flying boat had arrived in Honolulu on her first regular transpacific flight from California to the Philippines. Clipper started back from Manila yesterday. The plane left Alameda 10 days ago. Fast steamers require three weeks for trip.

China Clipper, Bound for U. S., Skims Pacific to Escape Winds

By the Associated Press.

Manila (Monday), Dec. 2.—The China Clipper hopped off from Manila Bay at 2:52 a. m. today (1:52 p. m. Sunday, Eastern standard time) for her return flight to the United States with the Orient's first load of transpacific air mail.

At 6 p. m., Eastern standard time, 4 hours and 8 minutes after the take-off, the big plane reported she was 400 miles out and bucking a 20-mile headwind. Seeking to avoid the wind, the pilots descended to a level only 350 feet above the Pacific.

Two hours later, the clipper reported the winds continued but that it had risen to 600 feet. It then was 635 miles out of Manila.

The big flying boat left three hours ahead of her tentative schedule because she was flying against the sun and Capt. E. C. Musick wanted to get under way before dawn. She was expected to reach Guam, 1,700 miles east, in 12 hours.

A 60-hour flying schedule to Alameda, Calif., 8,000 miles away lay ahead. She is due there December 6, the day her sister ship, the Philippine Clipper, is to take off for her first hop to the Philippines.

Among the thousands of letters aboard was one from Manuel Quezon, newly inaugurated president of the Philippine Commonwealth, to President Roosevelt.

The return flight was started just 2½ days after the China Clipper sailed in to complete her maiden air-mail voyage across the Pacific, which also required 60 hours of flying.

Only Capt. Musick and his crew of eight were aboard. Pan American Airways officials said, however, the Clipper would pick up other company employes at Wake and Midway Islands for transportation to Honolulu.

These employes have been on the job nine months at the midpacific air bases. On her westward flight the China Clipper carried men from Honolulu to relieve them.

Pan American officials said the Clipper planes would make at least five trips before undertaking to carry regular passengers.

The big planes—there will be three of them when the Hawaii Clipper flies from the Atlantic Coast soon to join the Pacific service—are equipped to carry 48 passengers by day and 18 by night. The only night schedule on the route is the 2,400-mile stretch between Alameda and Honolulu.

League Shocked.

By the United Press.

Geneva, Dec. 1.—The Canadian government's repudiation of oil sanctions shocked League of Nations officials tonight.

Augusto de Vasconcellos, of Portugal, chairman of the "sanctions general staff" of 18, said, however that Canada's declaration "will not affect our action."

Other delegates, after momentary amazement, predicted that Canada's changed attitude would hamper extension of sanctions when the committee of 18 meets December 12 to consider the oil ban against Italy.

Vasconcellos minimized the importance of Canada's action, explaining "Canada is not an exporter of petroleum."

was not available for comment towas ont available for comment tonight, but diplomats believed he advanced the oil proposal under his instructions from the Bennett government of Canada and had not then received new instructions from the Mackenzie King government.

Last summer Canada suggested to the League committee of 13, created after the denouncing of German rearmament, that oil, coal, iron, steel and copper should be included in any list of key products cut off from treaty breakers.

Italy Marshals Women of Land To Meet Siege

Italians said they awaited the next Franco-British moves.

These sources warned against interpreting every conversation between Il Duce, the British Ambassador, Sir Eric Drummond, and the French envoy, Count de Chambrun, as a "peace talk."

Sir Samuel Hoare, the British foreign secretary, and Premier Laval of France both know Il Duce's minimum demands, it was contended, and there is no indication they have modified their positions to meet them.

The women whom Mussolini exhorted today represented committees of Italy's 94 provinces. They will be received by Pope Pius tomorrow before returning to their homes to marshal battalions against Geneva.

"Resist!" Their War Cry.

They will wage a house-to-house campaign with the watchword "Resist! Resist!"

They will urge all to adhere rigidly to regulations for food and fuel conservation, to preserve old paper and other waste, and to harvest scrap metal and gold for the government.

The possibility of an oil embargo continues to occupy all who have speculated on an European war. December 12, when the League sanctions committee will meet again, is regarded as the fateful dates when these speculations will be answered. It is believed in informed circles the peacemakers must work fast if they are to succeed.

Officially and unofficially Italy looks anxiously to Washington for an authoritative hint of the American oil policy. The course of the United States is widely regarded as a certain influence at Geneva and therefore indirectly on the peace of Europe.

Trio Held as Reds Report Beatings

Two in Critical Condition in Tampa Hospital.

By the Associated Press.

Tampa, Fla., Dec. 1.—Three of six men detained by police last night for investigation of alleged Communist activities reported to Sheriff McLeod today that after being released they were seized by a masked mob, taken into the woods near Tampa and beaten, tarred and feathered.

Two of them, listed as Joseph A. Shoemaker and Sam G. Rogers, were in a hospital. Their condition was reported critical. The third, who said he was E. F. Poulnot, organizer of the Unemployed Brotherhood of Hillsborough County, was treated at his home.

L. T. Shoemaker, brother of the injured man, said Rogers and Poulnot managed to get back to the city and telephone him. He found his brother eight hours later, unconscious and almost dead from exposure.

Durant Labels U. S. Mediocre, Visions Crisis

Says Nation Approaches Test With Skilled Diplomats of Japan, Europe.

By the United Press.

New York, Dec. 1.—Dr. Will Durant, philospher, called the Presidency of the United States an outworn institution today and said our "headless democracy advances confidently to the inevitable test, in diplomacy and war, with the trained aristocracies of Europe and Japan."

The criticism was not aimed at President Roosevelt, but at the American system of government, "in which men are selected for office because of their political skill" instead of fitness for office.

Durant offered no substitute for the Presidential system, but he did propose possible solutions to biological, economic, moral and political problems which he said constitute a major crisis in our history.

Speaking before the congregation Rodelph Sholom, Durant advocated sterilization of defectives, revival of the marriage dowry, free facilities for motherhood by the fit and the closing of public offices to politicians as solutions to the major ills confronting America.

"The most fundamental of these problems is biological: the threatened deterioration of our stock through the low birthrate of the able and the replenishment of our population through the high birthrate of mediocrity," Durant said.

"This breeding from the bottom and dying at the top frustrates recovery by flooding our cities with new millions of arms and legs at the very time when invention has made mere muscle superabundant in industry and has put a premium on brains. It frustrates democracy by sterilizing the families that generate statesmen, and creating manipulable masses who get born, breed and die before they can possibly find out what it is all about. The high birthrate of ignorance outruns the propagation of intelligence."

Ethiopians Hear Poison Caused Lij Yasu's Death

London, Dec. 1 (U.P.).—Rumors that poisoning caused the death last week of Lij Yasu, Emperor Haile Selassie's predecessor on the throne of Ethiopia, caused great excitement among the troops and population of Dessye, the News Chronicle's correspondent there reported today.

The troops reportedly threatened to refuse to march to the front Saturday night and both soldiers and civilians were adopting a hostile attitude toward Haile Selassie since it is Ethiopian tradition not to kill a political enemy.

Lij Yasu had been held in chains for several years as Haile Selassie's personal prisoner. His guards were threatened with death should he escape.

Two Japanese Slain in China; Tension Grows

sidering this purely Oriental problem, Fox said he believed.

4. Sung Cheh-Yuan reiterated his stand that Nanking must consider North China autonomy sentiment seriously and make appropriate concessions. Otherwise the northern provinces must separate from the Nanking-controlled regions of the Yangtse valley.

5. Japanese military activities continued. Aerial patrols were active to the south of the Yellow River, presumably to report possible troop movements by the Nanking regime. Japanese forces were in full control of the Tientsin-Peiping area. Ten additional troop trains had arrived at Shanhaikwan.

6. Japanese agents were reported in conversation with the Panchan Lama, powerful Tibetan leader, in an effort to win his support in the northwest. The Panchan Lama has thousands of followers in the regions affected by the autonomy movement. His support would be of great value in spreading Japanese influence into central Asia, especially if he regains control of Tibet.

Meantime the exact stakes for which the Japanese army is playing still were not entirely apparent. It still was believed that the five north China provinces—Hopei, Shangtung, Charhar, Suiyuan and Shansi—eventually must be made autonomous in reality if not in name and that Nanking must admit they constitute a Japanese sphere of influence in which no move can be made without the Japanese army's consent. However, observers thought it possible that if Nanking will make concessions, involving a sincere pledge to call off the anti-Japanese movement throughout China, some face-saving formula for Chiang Kai-Shek and his associates still may be worked out.

New U. S. Step For Neutrality Held Doubtful

Further Embargo Action Believed Barred by Present Law.

By the Associated Press.

Well-informed quarters said yesterday there had been no indication the United States was contemplating any immediate neutrality steps beyond those already taken to discourage sales of war supplies to Italy and Ethiopia.

This expression was elicited by London dispatches reporting that Great Britain had found encouragement for the success of a possible oil embargo against Italy in hints that the United States might tacitly but effectively join in such a move.

Two primary considerations stand at present as obstacles to direct American participation in any form of sanctions against Italy:

The United States Government's determination to pursue a strictly separate and independent neutrality in the Italo-Ethiopian war, regardless of what other nations or groups of nations do.

Its neutrality law is applicable to both belligerents rather than directed against one side, as is the League of Nations' program of sanctions.

Embargo Declared.

The Administration has declared embargoes on shipments of actual implements of war and has sought by moral and financial pressure to prevent abnormal shipments of such materials as oil, copper, scrap iron and steel, motor trucks and tractors.

Responsible quarters concede that the present neutrality law gives the Administration no authority to extend its flat embargo to embrace essential war supplies, a step which many believe to be necessary for any effective Government control over such shipments.

Proponents of the League sanctions program abroad contend that as long as Italy is able to buy in the United States oil and other commodities necessary for her campaign in East Africa, League efforts to end hostilities by throttling Italy economically will be ineffective.

Insofar as the League angle is concerned, this argument holds little weight in Administration circles. Its primary purposes are to keep America out of war and foreign entanglements and to avoid contributing to a prolongation of war by making available necessary supplies and equipment to the belligerents.

Seek Revised Act.

Some officials, contending that the present law does not permit sufficient latitude to accomplish the objective, have announced plans to seek a more flexible act when Congress reconvenes.

There is sentiment in congressional circles both for and against a statute which would give to the President discretionary power to embargo any commodity he deemed necessary and also a proposal to establish quota restrictions beyond which exports of war supplies could not go. Both of these are favored by the State Department.

Regardless of what form the new legislation finally may take, Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington, a member of the Senate Munitions Committee which sponsored the present neutrality, predicted the committee would seek a more adequate and far-reaching law.

Fearing further disturbances, the entire Jewish population of the township of Klowow near Ordzywol journeyed by foot to the City of Radom.

Restful Sunday At Home Spent By Roosevelt

President Loafs in Georgia Sunshine; Plans Speeches for Chicago Trip.

By the Associated Press.

Warm Springs, Ga., Dec. 1.—President Roosevelt spent Sunday quietly at home enjoying the warm sunshine and loafing.

However, he was undoubtedly giving thought to two speeches to be made a week hence, on his return to the White House by way of Chicago.

Leaving here next Sunday, he will address the American Farm Bureau Federation in annual convention the following day at Chicago.

The same afternoon he will attend a special convocation of Notre Dame University at South Bend, Ind., where he will be awarded an honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Tomorrow afternoon Mr. Roosevelt plans to motor to the nearby Pine Valley rural resettlement project. This is one of the first projects fostered by the Administration.

He will be accompanied on this trip by Miss Gay Shepperson, of the Georgia Works Progress Administration, and R. Morris, of Chipley, Ga.

For the most part, however, he seems intent on making the most of the opportunity for outdoor exercise during the final week of his annual sojourn here. A busy year is ahead with Congress meeting in January and the national election on next fall.

Ideal weather is prevailing to give every opportunity for outdoor swimming and motoring.

Work on the budget figures for the regular Government departments during the next fiscal year has been virtually completed. The President has stated these expenditures have been trimmed $400,000,000 below estimates submitted by the department heads.

Some singers from a Civilian Conservation Corps camp near Fort Benning, Ga., called during the afternoon and entertained.

Charles West, the Undersecretary of the Interior and liaison officer between the White House and Congress, left early today after a talk with the President on the legislative program for the coming session. He had no comment.

Mrs. Roosevelt also departed for Washington, where she will join the President upon his return next week.

Harvard Officials Deny Ouster Plan

State Action Awaited on Mather Oath Dispute.

By the United Press.

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 1.—Harvard University officials "have not even considered" the question of relieving Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, noted geologist and descendant of Cotton Mather, from his teaching duties at Harvard because of his refusal to subscribe fully to Massachusetts' new patriotism law, the university announced tonight.

Earlier it had been said that Dr. Mather faced possible dismssal because he had made two reservations in taking the teacher's oath to uphold the State and Federal constitutions.

The university disclosed that Dr. Mather's oath has been forwarded to State Education Commissioner Payson Smith and that if it is returned "because the commissioner considers it to be technically imperfect, Prof. Mather's attention will be called to this fact."

One of Dr. Mather's reservations specifies he will not sever his relations with the American-Russian Institute for Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union "because science recognizes no political boundaries." The other States that he wants it definitely understood he is not transferring from the university to the State the right to judge his fitness to teach.

Wife, Oil Man Slain; Husband Admits Crime

Paola, Kans., Dec. 1 (AP).—Mrs. Esther Zakoura, 31, wife of a restaurant operator, and Harry Cochran, 45, oil field worker, were shot to death here today. Sheriff Harve Lininger said Albert Zakoura, 40, the woman's husband, admitted the slayings.

Frances Officer, a waitress, said Zakoura accused Cochran of "talking to my wife too much."

Oliver Rinehart, county attorney, announced he would file murder charges against Zakoura and seek the death penalty. Mrs. Zakoura recently inherited $20,000.

Women's Party Criticizes Trial Of Hill Teacher

State's Failure to Include Feminine Members on Jury Hit.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 1.—The National Woman's Party criticized today the trial of Edith Maxwell, young Virginia woman convicted of killing her father with a high-heeled shoe, on the ground women were excluded from the jury.

The party, in national conference, adopted a resolution declaring "the National Woman's Party is greatly aroused because Edith Maxwell was not tried by a jury of her peers, since women are denied the right to sit on juries in Virginia."

The resolution declared "adult women should not be compelled to submit to chastisement of parents, whether drunk or sober," and demanded passage of the proposed "equal rights" amendment to the Federal Constitution as a means of placing women on all juries.

The party adopted another resolution requesting President Roosevelt and Congress to approve the amendment, and to repeal the clause in the national economy act preventing married women from holding Federal jobs when their husbands are similarly employed.

Honoring Susan B. Anthony, famous suffrage leader, with assurance of a postage stamp February 15, her birthday, was asked in a resolution to be presented to Postmaster General Farley.

Other resolutions expressed gratitude to Gov. Nice of Maryland for appointing 80 women to State positions, to Representative Stephen M. Young, of Ohio, for introducing a Federal women jurors' bill in Congress, and to Representative Louis Ludlow, of Indiana, for championing women's rights.

The party condemned all interstate labor compacts having distinctions based on sex and urged Congress to refuse to sanction any such agreements.

The two-day conference of the Woman's Party closed with a luncheon meeting.

Cullen Is Freed In Lynch Death Pending Probe

Leo T. Cullen, 31, was released in the custody of his attorney yesterday to appear at a coroner's inquest into the shooting of Miss Elizabeth Lynch, 35-year-old switchboard operator. The inquest has been set tentatively for 11:30 a. m. tomorrow.

Cullen and William A. (Dutch) Kappel, 34, have been held on investigation charges since Miss Lynch was found lying dead on the floor in the kitchen of her home, 918 Fourth street northeast, Wednesday morning with a bullet in the left side of her head. Kappel is still under arrest at the Ninth Precinct.

Homicide squad detectives continued to interview neighbors yesterday in an effort to determine the time Miss Lynch arrived home Tuesday, or if anyone in the neighborhood had heard a shot and could establish an exact time.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald and Detective Sergt. John Dalglish, of the homicide squad, in charge of the investigation, have said the case is definitely "not suicide." They said Miss Lynch was murdered.

Kappel told police he took Miss Lynch home about midnight Tuesday night and that she would not let him enter the house.

Murder Charge Is Unlikely For Wise County Youth

preliminary hearing in the case in Wise about Friday, Greear said.

The father was buried today, but his son did not attend the funeral.

The youth is held without bond in Wise County Jail here on a charge of slaying his 59 year-old father after an argument over responsibility for a breakdown of the family car.

In a nearby cell in the same jail is Edith Maxwell, comely 21-year-old Wise County school teacher, whose attorneys are now perfecting their appeal from her conviction of murder of her father under conditions similar in many respects to those involved in the accusations against young Falin.

Claim Self-Defense.

Both Miss Maxwell and young Falin claim self-defense against "drunken" fathers who attempted to whip them.

Miss Maxwell's story, as told from the witness stand in Wise Circuit Court, was that her father, Trigg Maxwell, Pound blacksmith, attempted to spank her for staying out late at night. She said he struck her, knocking her down, and in the scuffle she picked up a high-heeled slipper and hit her father on the head. He died a few hours later.

The prosecution, however, presented witnesses denying her father was drunk, although it was shown he had drunk three bottles of beer that afternoon and night. The prosecution accused the girl of premeditated murder, presnting testimony that she had previously said she "could kill" her father.

Story Similar.

Young Falin's story as told to officers who arrested him and later reiterated in a public statement from his jail cell, was similar. He said he and his father were returning home from Wise Courthouse, where they had gone to testify before a grand jury in an attack case, when the car broke down and his father accused him of failing to put water in the radiator.

"The car stopped about a quarter of a mile from our home," the boy said. "Oil was leaking around the plugs and we were not able to start it. Pa cursed he and my mother and said it was our fault—we had ruined the car. I kept cranking the car and couldn't start it and then pa smacked me and cursed me again."

Young Falin said he ran home and was "standing there drinking a gin buck" when his father came in.

"He came in the room and said he ought to kill me," he said. "Then he hit me on the head with the butt of a pistol, knocking he down, and started stomping me.

"My mother and brothers begged him to please leave me alone. He walked in the other room and I heard him say, "I might as well finish the little — — —."

Haugeman said he ran into the kitchen, grabbed a shotgun, went out to the front of the house. His father followed him, pointing a pistol at him, he said, "so I shot."

The boy then went to Big Stone Gap to be treated for wounds he claims were inflicted by his father, and it was there he was arrested.

The boy's mother corroborated his account of the shooting.

J. R. Taylor, undertaker, said that when he arrived at the Falin home he found the elder Falin's hand gripping a pistol and a nearly empty whisky bottle in his pocket.

Admits Killing Father.

Georgetown, Ky., Dec. 1 (AP).—Francis Warren, 24-year-old farm youth, was quoted today by Sheriff Greenville Stockdell as saing he killed his father yesterday to save his sister from a beating.

The father, Charles Warren, 67, was shot through the heart by a shotgun blast. Young Warren was charged with manslaughter, and released in $2,000 bond pending examining trial next Friday before County Judge George Barkley.

Betsy Warren, 19, ran to a neighbor's just as the family fight climaxed in tragedy. The neighbors summoned officers.

The youth, Sheriff Stockdell said, related his father was beating Betsy in a drunken rage, that he interfered and fired in self-defense.

Edith Maxwell Defense Fund Rises to $359

27 Persons Add $56.25 in Day; Many Comment on 'Worthy Cause.'

Twenty-seven persons yesterday sent $56.25 as their contributions to the Edith Maxwell defense fund. A twenty-eighth lover of justice, unable to send any money, donated two pages of verse instead.

The following are sample comments accompanying donations of persons who believe the Virginia school teacher was acting only in self-defense against a drink-crazed father when she killed him with a shoe heel:

"It is heartening to read of the individuals and groups who are working in her behalf."

"I think she should have her freedom as a drunkard man is a terrible thing. Please except this small sum. Wish it could be $100 instead."

"It will be an outrage if that poor girl is not released."

"So glad you took up this worthy cause of justice."

Eviction Faces 30,000 as Aid System Breaks

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—The approach of Christmas brought dark tidings to 30,000 Chicago persons threatened with eviction from their homes.

The Chicago Real Estate Board decreed work-relief families would be put out if they could not pay their rent in December.

Orders to "get either their rent or their apartments this month" have gone out to all board members, John C. Bowers, president, said.

Signs went up at strategic points in the city reading:

"We do not rent to relief clients."

Policies of the emergency relief administration in Cook County (Chicago) were to blame, Bowers said.

While relief clients were on the "dole," he asserted, the relief board paid a certain percentage of the funds for rent directly to the landlords. When the clients shifted to WPA jobs, it was up to them to pay their own rent and Bowers said it was "questionable" if many would be able to pay it from their $13-a-week stipend.

"Landlords have been too tolerant with the relief people," he declared. "They are paying 85 per cent of the cost of government now. Why should they be saddled with the added cost of keeping those on relief?"

Bowers said the number of persons covered by the eviction order "might well be 30,000."

Wilfred S. Reynolds, executive secretary of the Illinois relief administration, said that the relief administration stood ready to aid clients—on both direct and work relief rolls—in rent payments.

Livermore Boy Fights for Life; Operation Due

Bullet Lodged Near Spine; Pneumonia Feared; Mother in Cell.

By the United Press.

Santa Barbara, Calif., Dec. 1.—The weird family tragedy in which the divorced wife of Jesse Livermore, Wall Street's one-time "boy plunger," shot and critically wounded their overgrown son as an aftermath of a midnight drinking bout, will reach a turning point tomorrow morning.

Unless the boy, Jesse Livermore, jr., takes a sudden turn for the worse, an operation will be performed after daybreak to extract a splintered bullet, lodged in his back within a half-inch of his spine.

At 10 a. m. District Attorney Percy Heckendorf will file charges against the jailed mother, Mrs. Dorothea Wendt Livermore Longcope—an attempted murder complaint if young Livermore survives the operation, a murder charge if he dies.

Counsel's Statement.

Harrison Ryon, Mrs. Livermore's attorney, tonight issued the first formal statement in behalf of the mother:

"I have just talked with Mrs. Longcope and other guests at her house party. It is clear that the discharge of the shot was purely accidental.

"Mrs. Longcope had no knowledge or suspicion that the gun was loaded.

"From my investigation of this case it seems clear very little liquor was consumed in the course of the party as a whole. After the guests has left, Jesse Livermore, jr., returned to the house and he and his mother then had some Scotch whisky together."

It was after this two-hour drinking session that the mother began a tirade against her son's drinking, shouting she would "rather see you dead than drinking this way." The boy thrust a gun into her hands and said:

"You haven't got the nerve to shoot me."

The mother grabbed the gun and fired a bullet through his chest.

Fear Pneumonia.

Tonight, young Livermore, strapping 16-year-old schoolboy athlete, was resting more easily, as doctors fought to stave off pneumonia. Dr. Irving Wills, one of his physicians, explained the boy's lung almost had reached the stage of "low grade and potential pneumonia."

The father, Jesse Livermore, sr., spare, white-haired and visibly nervous, visited his son for 15 minutes. When he emerged he seemed calmer than at any time since he reached the bedside of his wounded son early Saturday.

He has maintained a stony silence, refusing to discuss the case beyond a brief talk with Heckendorf.

The Livermore family appeared lined up against the pale, freckle-faced mother. Only the wounded boy has made any utterance that might indicate forgiveness for the mother who snatched a gun from her son's hands, after he dared her to shoot him, and fired a bullet through his chest.

Tri-State Killers Are Electrocuted

By the Associated Press.

Rockview Penitentiary, Bellefonte, Pa. (Monday) Dec. 2.—Martin Farrell and Francis Wiley, last of the Mais gang "big shots," were executed early today for the kidnap-slaying of William Weiss, Philadelphia gambler.

Neither of the two killers, leaders of the Tri-State mob that spread a trail of robberies and slayings in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia, made any statement before they were strapped into the penitentiary's death chair.

Brother Holds Edith Innocent; Presses Fight

into the defense of his sister. From the first, he said today, he has been convinced of her innocence.

"I still think dad died from a stroke of apoplexy," he declared as he leaned forward in a rocking chair at the Maxwells' white frame shack. Earl has been out of the mountains 16 years. His speech shows the difference. The rest of the family refers to the dead father as pappy. Earl invariably calls him dad.

Defends Apoplexy Theory.

"Yes, I know the autopsy said he died from a blood clot," Edith's brother continued. "And, of course, doctors know more about those things than I do. But couldn't that clot have been caused by a stroke? Remember dad had been drinking for years, ever since he was 10 or 11 years old, I guess. And he used to fly into terrible rages. He was drunk and in a fury that night he tried to beat Edith. Well, couldn't the drink and the fury have brought on apoplexy?"

Even if Edith Maxwell is responsible for the forming of the bloodclot, her brother is certain she had no intention of harming Pappy Maxwell, when she hit him on the head with a slipper as he dragged her around by the hair, banged her against furniture, and threatened her with a butcher knife that fateful midnight in July. Pappy was mad because Edith had stayed out after dark with a neighbor boy.

"She hit dad with the first thing she could get hold of, frantic in her efforts to free herself," explained young Maxwell. "And if she had intended to murder him she would have kept on hitting him on the head until he was dead, wouldn't she? But as soon as he let her go she stopped. She didn't know dad was hurt. He said he wasn't. Mother asked him and he said he wasn't."

All this, Earl Maxwell reminded his listener, was brought out at Edith's trial about two weeks ago. "And yet they sentenced her to 25 years in the penitentiary," he said. The young man who bade goodby to the lonesome pine country 16 years ago shook his head slowly, trying to fathom this mountain version of justice.

"I never dreamed they'd do that to her," he said.

Young Maxwell had been away from this coal-mining section of the mountains so long he had almost forgotten that a man here is a little czar in his own home. He didn't realize the miners and mountaineers would have no mercy on the girl who had struck back at her father in self-defense; that they would consider her long prison sentence "a lesson in what's sinful."

But Earl Maxwell soon found out.

"There wasn't a lawyer around here who would take the case at first," said Edith's brother. "They knew how strong the sentiment would be against them."

Uncle Made Offer.

Some of this reluctance may have been due to the financial situation of the Maxwells, Earl admitted. The family, like many another family here, is in fairly poor circumstances. Trigg Maxwell, according to his son, made about $16 a week as an inspector of mine pumps. He paid his bills promptly but there wasn't much left over aside from two small pieces of property.

"Finally my uncle, W. W. Dotson—he's mother's brother—offered to take the case," Edith's brother continued, "but we thought he wouldn't stand much show, being a close relative and all. I wanted to plead for Edith myself in court but they wouldn't let me because I've never been admitted to the bar."

And so days went by with Earl Maxwell gathering all the evidence he could. Then he found a lawyer over in Dickinson County who was willing to tackle the case. It was former Judge A. A. Skeen, of Clintwood. Young Maxwell laid everything he had gathered before the tall, kindly attorney in his red brick, white-pillared Colonial mansion. They decided to have W. W. Dotson, Edith's lawyer uncle from Wise, help them. Then, a day or two before the trial R. P. Bruce, of Wise, a former State senator, joined the counsel for the defense.

Those three lawyers are now working day and night, preparing their briefs for a new trial. Judge H. A. W. Skeen is expected to rule on their appeal a week from Thursday. It was he who sentenced Edith to 25 years in the penitentiary after a jury of farmers brought in a verdict of first degree murder.

The girl's defense counsel wants Judge Skeen, 76-year-old distant relative of Attorney Skeen, to preside at the next trial. So does Edith's brother.

"He's a fine, square and honest man," said Earl Maxwell today.

The judge is also a distant relative of Trigg Maxwell's brother-in-law, B. Lee Skeen, a United States deputy marshal who has been bitter in his denunciation of Edith, the young mountain school teacher who struck her pappy in self-defense.

Spread of Disease Checked by Nurse

Health Service Is Effective, Says Maryland Chief.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Dec. 1.—Outlining a typical case of public health work, State Health Officer R. H. Riley today told how a recent outbreak of scarlet fever in a Maryland community was checked.

The epidemic started from a family group of 25 persons who moved into the State and settled down to spend the winter at a tourist camp. Most of the 15 children were entered in school, Dr. Riley said.

A few days later one of the children became ill. The parents suspected the cause, but did not prevent the other children from continuing in school. As a result, two of the sick child's classmates also became ill.

The county public health nurse, looking for the source of the disease, learned of the first child to become ill, and diagnosed his ailment as scarlet fever. Strict quarantine was imposed, but eight other children had caught the disease in the meantime. However, it was kept from spreading further, Dr. Riley said.

Arlington Drive Report Planned By Red Cross

Increased Enrollment Is Seen; All Public School Pupils Registered.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Reports from the annual roll call will be the feature of the December meeting of the Arlington County Chapter, American Red Cross, to be held at 8 p. m. today in the Ashton Heights Woman's Clubhouse, Chapter Chairman George A. Collier announced last night.

Roll call chairmen from all sections of the county will report for their respective areas. Incomplete returns indicate larger enrollments than last year in most communities, but final returns will be necessary to determine whether the goal of 1,500 members has been reached.

Every public school student has been enrolled in the Junior Red Cross according to Junior Chairman Miss Gertrude Smith. The Junior Red Cross also has been organized in St. Charles Parochial School, under the direction of Sister Pierre.

Current activities of the chapter will be reported by chairmen of the various committees, including home service, production, first aid and home hygiene. Mrs. Ethel Cook, in charge of the motor corps, will report on the returns for the accident preventive program conducted by the school children.

The chapter's budget for 1936 will be discussed and plans made for the annual meeting of the chapter early in January. Miss Sadie James, field representative of the Red Cross, will bring a message from the national organization.

The Young Men's Bible Class of the Community Methodist Church in Aurora Heights will hold its annual banquet with parents as honored guests at 6:30 p. m. tomorrow in the church. The Rev. Angie Smith, pastor of Mount Vernon Methodist Church in Washington, will be guest speaker.

Committee in charge of arrangements consists of Wilbur Hall, Leland Dodd, Warner Graves, Frank Watt, Charles King, James Campbell, John Daniels and Carl Stuckey.

Plans have been completed for the tenth annual service sale card party Friday night in the Odd Fellows Hall, under auspices of Arlington Unit No. 139, American Legion Auxiliary, according to announcement by Mrs. H. W. Beattie and Mrs. Blanche Yorkdale, general chairman in charge of arrangements.

All prizes to be offered are made by disabled veterans of Virginia, and money paid for each article goes to the veteran who made it. Prizes are now on display in the windows of the American Drug Store in Clarendon.

Members of the committee assisting in arrangements are Mrs. Lillian R. Edwards, Mrs. Joseph D. McDonnell, Mrs. May Delehanty, Mrs. Flora Cumberland, Mrs. DeLana Roberston, Miss Betty Sherwood and Miss Fignon Lunquest. The hostesses are Mrs. J. O. Frank, Mrs. Laura Maycock, Mrs. W. C. Welburn, Mrs. Caroline French, Mrs. DeLana Roberston and Mrs. Frank M. Sherwood.

Dr. Oscar Wilkinson, of Washington, who recently operated an eye, ear and throat hospital in Washington, will be the speaker at the meeting of the Women's Auxiliary of the Arlington Hospital Association to be held at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon in the Lyon Park Community House. Dr. Wilkinson will speak on "Problems of Managing a Small Hospital."

Final results of the recent drive for funds carried on jointly by the hospital association and county welfare board will be announced at this meeting.

Mrs. J. C. Boss, president, announces that the constitution and by-laws will be reviewed and officers elected.

The Arlington County Bar Association will meet at the courthouse at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Montgomery Players To Present Comedy

Members of the Montgomery Players cast who will appear in John Drinkwater's comedy, "Bird in Hand," Saturday night in Leland Junior High School, Chevy Chase, were announced yesterday by Mrs. Ailene Sanford.

Parts will be taken by Doris Dewey, J. A. Bishop, Betty Chase, Howard Bandy, Clifton Whyte, Robert Warfield, Fred M. Kerby, David Wollhaupter.

Topics Are Set For Community Council Session

Root, Bomberger Address Meeting in Afternoon in Prince Georges.

The annual winter meeting of the Prince Georges County (Md.) Community Council will be held tomorrow in the Upper Marlboro High School auditorium at 10 a. m.

Talks by Irving C. Root, chief engineer of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and Dr. Frank B. Bomberger, president of the Baltimore Bank for Co-operatives, will be high lights of the afternoon session. Root will discuss the commission's plans for new parks in the county, while Dr. Bomberger will give an address on "Financing the Farm Business."

Following the morning meeting, luncheon will be served by ladies of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church.

Four addresses on county work will be given at the opening of the morning program, following the treasurer's report. They will be "Home Service," by Miss Ethel Regan, county home demonstration agent; "Agriculture," by P. E. Clark, county agricultural agent; "Social Service," by Miss Agnes Duvall, county nurse, and "Health Service," by Dr. H. B. Hooton, county health officer.

Phases of the county Red Cross program will be discussed by Miss Regan and J. F. Armstrong, whose topic will be "Results of Red Cross Gardens;" Mrs. James Severe, on "Distribution of Garments;" Mrs. Claude Gilbert, on "War Veteran Relief;" Miss Maude Gibbs, on "Junior Red Cross;" H. L. Leonard, president of the Prince Georges County Rescue Squad, on "First-Aid Relief Activities," and John S. White, county Red Cross chairman, on "The Membership Drive."

Mrs. J. Enos Ray, chairman of the county welfare board, will talk on "How the County Relief Board Will Meet the Relief Situation When Federal Funds Are Withdrawn," and W. R. Beattie, president of the county Volunteer Firemen's Association, will tell of "Fire Protection for the Home."

Various community projects will be discussed at the monthly meeting of the College Park Improvement Association today at 8 p. m. in the parish hall of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church.

Consideration will be given the continuation of the sidewalk on the north side of the College avenue paved section, drainage improvement and better street lighting. Residents will be asked to turn on their porch lights this month as an experiment to ascertain whether they will provide sufficient illumination for the streets.

H. L. Clarke has been appointed chairman of the association's membership committee by Dr. S. S. Steinberg, president. A ways and means committee, composed of Harold J. Crelly, chairman, and Mrs. Myron Creese, J. H. Headley, Jose Arisso and Lee Sellman, also has been named.

Bertram Clark has been elected president of the Epworth League of the Bowie Methodist Episcopal Church. Other officers chosen were Clara Martin, first vice president; Harold Coburn, second vice president; Elizabeth Berbig, third vice president; Inez Kreitzer, fourth vice president; John Clark, treasurer, and Wilma Martin, secretary.

A meeting of the Beaver Heights-Tuxedo Citizens Association will be held today at 8 p. m. in the Cheverly-Tuxedo fire hall, with several problems of community interest being sscheduled for discussion.

The Mothers and Teachers' Club of the Hyattsville elementary school will hold a meeting tomorrow at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the Olive Street School.

A card party will be given by the ladies auxiliary of the Branchville Volunteer Fire Department tonight in the firehall.

The Ladies' Guild of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church, Bladensburg, will hold a card party tomorrow night in the parish hall. Mrs. Richard Schuler, president, is in charge.

A Reasonable Demand.

Asserting that it is impossible to predict the nature of future naval limitation treaties, "if any," Secretary Swanson in his annual report recommends that the navy be built up to the full strength authorized in the Washington and London pacts. The Secretary's pessimism regarding the prospect of securing naval reductions by agreement at the coming London conference merely reflects the prevailing view resulting from the widespread disturbances and political tension throughout the world.

More particularly, Japan's short-sightedness in launching an aggressive drive against North China on the eve of the London conference has played directly into the hands of the big-navy advocates in this country. It has also convinced many Americans who heartily approve in principle of naval reduction that our defensive fleet should be built up to treaty strength in accordance with Secretary Swanson's recommendations.

Our delegates to the London conference have already been instructed to affirm the opposition of the United States to an expansion of navies. It is understood that the Administration will continue its naval construction program within treaty limits. That program could be quickly adjusted if an agreement should be reached. But under present conditions, a great deal will have been accomplished if the conference succeeds in curbing the expansionist trend that is a product of these troubled times.

Misplaced Emphasis.

The suggestion has been put forward that a West Point for civil service training be set up in Washington. Representative Wesley Disney, of Oklahoma, proposes to sponsor in the coming session of Congress a bill that would authorize establishment of a National Academy of Public Affairs. Its function would be to prepare young men and women for careers in the foreign and domestic departments of the Government. Applicants would be appointed by Senators and Representatives, in much the same manner that men are now named to the Military and Naval academies, with the moot understanding that the training would lead to a lifetime of Federal service.

The idea is appealing. If there is agreement on any phase of government today, it is probably on the point that efficiency of the system varies directly with the caliber of the employes charged with the operation of it. The whole civil service program is predicated on this theory, inasmuch as it places a premium on ability and the least possible emphasis on political "eligibility."

In current practice, however, clearance in the office of Mr. Farley is more important than special training for individuals seeking Federal jobs. A glance about Washington reveals the extent to which politics has reasserted itself in the selection of the Federal personnel. This reinstatement of the spoils system casts a serious doubt on the possible value of the proposed national academy. As it is today, there is no dearth of persons throughout the country well qualified to carry on the technical work of the Government. The difficulty is to induce them to assume the positions and, having once taken them, to remain in the midst of a political bureaucracy, facing constant attacks from what "Ding" Darling describes as the "fiends of frustration."

Under existing conditions, there is slight inducement for the man of superior ability and special training to offer his services in indorsement-minded Washington. Before setting out to train young men and women for civil service careers, therefore, the emphasis should be shifted to creation of a career service.

No Dissenting Opinion.

Citations of precedents and legal verbiage make the average reader turn with dismay from detailed reports of judicial decisions involving constitutional issues. But he will understand, without voicing a dissenting opinion, the decision of a Federal judge in Tampa that it would be unconstitutionally cruel and unusual punishment to make a man do jury service when he had planned to celebrate the opening of the hunting season.

This seemingly momentous dictum, however, must not arouse false hopes. It is not too good to be true, but far too good to serve as a precedent. The evil that men do lives after them in the shape of laws which make the attitude of this genial judge an exception which only proves the rule.

Moreover, constitutional guarantees are not always enough to make rights effective. The average man is less interested in the opinion of a Federal judge on his hunting plans than in what his employer thinks about them.

The Missing Link.

With commendable clarity and logic, the Special Committee on Taxation has laid before the Commissioners an outline of the District's fiscal problem, with a proper recommendation that the Commissioners present the issue to the public. Only through public hearings can the disfranchised citizens of Washington be given an opportunity to express their views as to needed improvements and taxes to finance them. It may be taken for granted that the Commissioners will approve this suggestion and that they will be strongly influenced in their recommendations to Congress by the results of the proposed hearings.

The committee's disinclination to formulate a tax program before the "imperative financial needs" of the local government have been determined is entirely reasonable. Chairman Prettyman and his colleagues do not believe "that taxes should be increased, either by increasing the rates of present taxes or by the introduction of new forms of tax, merely because the suggested taxes could be borne by taxpayers, or because the government could spend the money if it had it." When the Commissioners, with the aid of citizen groups, have agreed upon the essential improvements and maintenance costs over the next few years—knowing that increased expenditures are likely to entail new taxes—it will then be time to adjust levies in line with the new policy.

Information assembled by the committee, however, leaves meager hope that new taxes can be avoided. Administrative expenses are concentrated in four major community services—education, public welfare, police and fire protection. Rising standards and growth of the city make retrenchment in these major activities virtually impossible. And if Washington is to keep pace with other cities, expansion of present budgetary allowances will be necessary.

The neglect of municipal improvements in recent years creates an even more urgent demand for increased revenue. Capital outlays during the last three years amount to little more than half of the average expenditure for this purpose over the last ten years. The very conservative program outlined by the committee would require a substantial increase in appropriations of this character. Beyond that program looms the need for an airport, for a Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge, the Municipal Center, the elimination of pollution in Rock Creek Park, etc.

The committee has done well to bring to public attention the close relationship of these projects to the revenue problem. But there is another vital element in the situation which its report fails to clarify. In this period of rapid municipal growth, the largest District "taxpayer," being the Federal Government, is refusing to meet its share of the Capital City's expenses. So long as Congress' existing legal obligation to the District is ignored, and no substitute policy is adopted, there is a grave danger that any new taxes proposed may be used to reduce or prevent an increase in the Federal allowance.

If a comprehensive program of municipal improvements is to be undertaken, it is imperative that the so-called Federal contribution be placed on an equitable basis. It will be impossible for the Commissioners to adjust revenue to any pattern of public improvements, or to carry out any comprehensive plan of spending, until this uncertain factor in the equation can be determined without relying upon the momentary whims of a few willful congressmen. Consideration of the current long-term spending plan, together with the tax question, gives the Commissioners an excellent opportunity to propose a rational formula governing fiscal relations between the local and national governments. If no such formula can be devised, budgetary programs extending over a number of years are all too likely to become a fiasco at the expense of local taxpayers.

Reason And Error.

Washington, or that part of it refusing to become excited about the threat of communism in the schools, may take encouragement from the fact that thoughtful citizens throughout the country are taking a similar view. A sample of the reaction to this local furor may be found in a recent address by Dr. Dixon Ryan Fox, president of Union College and of the New York State Historical Association, before the National Council for Social Sciences in New York.

Persons who compel public school teachers to take oaths not to teach about communism, he said, are "lynchers of ideas" and "witch hunters." Stressing the point that the latest instance of such coercion comes "not in some remote and primitive mountain village but in the National Capital itself," he contended that the effect was to assure high school students that "reason and American experience cannot hold their own against a new doctrine." Those who think they can smother an idea by statute are mistaken, he declared, the only way to defeat an idea being to dissolve it with a better idea.

In Washington, he concluded, an effort is being made to preserve the Constitution by violating the spirit if not the letter of the first amendment. In consequence there is the danger, as Dr. Fox says, that dogma may be substituted for inquiry and that in the Capital where Thomas Jefferson once presided, there may be erased his penetrating aphorism, "Error is harmless so long as reason is left to combat it."

Resignation To Be Expected.

The rumored resignation of George N. Peek from his dual position as foreign trade adviser and head of the Export-Import Bank is no cause of surprise. On the contrary, it is amazing that Mr. Peek has remained so long in the Government service despite his lack of sympathy with policies that the Administration has indorsed. The candor and uncompromising vigor with which he has voiced his own views would be admirable if Mr. Peek were a private citizen. But no man holding an important public office can discharge his duties effectively if he is hostile to the aims and disapproves the methods of the Administration of which he is a part.

So long as policies are in a nebulous stage, open and frank discussion and criticism of debatable issues is permissible. But Mr. Peek has long overstayed that formative period when dissent might have been regarded as helpful rather than obstructive. Following a rather stormy exit from the office of AAA administrator, after repeated clashes with his colleagues, Mr. Peek assumed his present anomalous position which has brought him into frequent conflict with the State Department. He has repeatedly condemned the methods adopted in negotiating reciprocal tariff agreements, and as head of the Export-Import Bank he has tried to put through financial transactions of which the State Department disapproved.

Since the State Department is the agency responsible for negotiating trade pacts, Mr. Peek's criticism of the Administration's commercial policies has been as futile as it has been persistent. No doubt the report on the Canadian trade treaty which he has been requested to make will be a valedictory indictment of the State Department's methods. Indeed, it could not consistently be anything else since Mr. Peek is a firm believer in the superior efficacy of exclusive bilateral trade pacts as opposed to agreements carrying unconditional most-favored-nation clauses.

Such evident lack of unity creates a bad public impression and gives rise to fears that policies now being pursued may be reversed. Whatever the merits of Mr. Peek's views may be, therefore, it is illogical for him to remain as a member of an Administration with whose policies he is in direct opposition. Moreover, the effectiveness of his opposition would be increased if he were fighting outside rather than inside the Administration ranks.

Laval Still Faces Dilemma.

The vote of confidence given Premier Laval's cabinet when the French Chamber of Deputies upheld his fiscal policies appears to be more in the nature of a reprieve than an indorsement. A large majority of the deputies, indeed, are reported to have roundly applauded a speech by former Finance Minister Reynaud, denouncing the economy budget and declaring that devaluation provided the only possible solution of the present financial crisis.

The party groups that resent the sacrifices entailed by pursuing a sound money policy are not willing, however, to risk overthrowing Laval on that issue. They have too acute recollections of the disastrous experiences of earlier governments during the period of currency disorder preceding stabilization of the franc. The gravity of the problems that confront Premier Laval apparently have improved his chances of survival. Yet parliamentary government is certainly functioning inefficiently when a ministry is suffered to remain in office because opponents shun the responsibility that rests on those in power.

Other tests of strength will come on questions not connected with fiscal policies, and the outcome is highly uncertain. When Laval asks for permission to disband seditious organizations such as the fascist Croix de Feu and other anti-parliamentary groups a fierce battle is likely to be precipitated upon the floor of the Chamber of Deputies. Opposition groups, however, may well hesitate to overthrow the present government on that issue, since they might then have to resort to violent suppression of disaffected political elements.

The application of sanctions to Italy raises another important issue that constitutes a threat to the government. But again those who object to Laval's handling of foreign relations are fully aware that a reversal of his policies would create new dangers and difficulties for his successor.

France is not unique in possessing a host of politicians and legislators quick to attack but not prepared to put through constructive programs. That weakness on the constructive side is due in part to the complexity of the problems calling for solution. With the best will and with courage to act, it is often difficult to decide what ought to be done or whether any effective reforms are possible. In the case of France, the issues now before the country not only present a challenge to the courage and intelligence of political leaders, but those in positions of power are hampered by the existence of numerous small parties unable to agree upon a program of action. Under the circumstances, the strain placed upon the parliamentary system of government is exceptionally severe.

The fact that Premier Laval has accomplished as much as he has under serious handicaps is the best possible reason for hoping that he will win his battle to retain office.

The Case Of Edith Maxwell

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The Post deserves the wholehearted commendation of every enlightened and humane person for its effort to save Edith Maxwell from the vindictive vengence that puritanical provincialism has imposed upon her.

The use of the word "puritanical" with reference to a Southern verdict may seem odd, but puritanism, which is nearly synonymous with bigotry, is neither Northern, Southern, Eastern nor Western. It exists wherever human minds are immersed in the blackness of intolerance and ignorance. Ever and anon, just as we are congratulating ourselves on the widespread freedom from narrow-mindedness and prejudice, we are jarred by news of some revolting incident like the 25-year sentence given Edith Maxwell. It should serve to remind us of the unaltered necessity for eternal vigilance.

The Post should have the fullest co-operation of right-minded citizens in its attempt to aid this girl who, if she had not killed, would probably have been beaten to death.

Incidentally, Virginia Lee Warren merits high praise for her reportorial work in this case. Her articles are excellent journalism. They are more than that—they are vivid descriptions of legalistic cruelty that savors of sadism.

LINN A. E. GALE.
Washington, Nov. 29.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Passing by the Edith Maxwell case, with the few observations herewith, I wish to call to your attention that you and the other papers of Washington could be serving a much higher purpose, if you would start a crusade against officials here, past and present, who failed to clear up and convict the guilty ones who have killed so many women in Washington. It is a thing almost without memory of man, to recall the conviction of a woman-killer in and about Washington, provided the guilty one did not actually present himself to the police, with a written confession signed before a notary public. Perhaps we had better import some of the officials and jurymen of the mountains of Virginia.

In the Edith Maxwell case evidence of premeditation was shown by proving that at least on two occasions she had declared that she would kill her father; and it was virtually conceded that the other requirements of proof were met, except as to intent. This last requirement, intent, was the issue over which the case was fought. But always the defense was baffled by the proof of the declaration, of the defenadnt, to kill her father. And to the human mind it does seem incompatible that one who had publicly declared that she would kill, yet declares that at the time of the killing she did not intend to do so; that it was self-defense.

Virginia has a system of government far superior to that of most States, and it has a citizenry which are the product of those who made the laws, and there is no prima facie case yet made that that government, that system of laws and justice, or her citizenry has failed.

Washington needs some officials who will give women protection and, failing in that, to assure women that their murderers will be punished. And the courts of Washington could use a few jurymen of the mountaineer type to assure proper verdicts.

Personaly, I hope there will be found some way to ease the sentence of Edith Maxwell, but as to that I am content to leave the matter in the hands of those chosen for that purpose.

Let us repair our own house before proceeding, unsought, to attempt to put some other's in order.

GEORGE W. JONES.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Anent the Maxwell case, the retrogression of the grand old State of Virginia, cradle of American liberty and birthplace of independence, is sad to look upon. Patrick Henry must turn in his grave and the most honored liberator of them all, in his tomb at Mount Vernon, must feel his efforts wasted.

The Maxwell case reflects the black shadows of the dark ages when individual justice was a travesty and repression of human rights the perogative of tyrants. The injustice and prejudice apparent in this trial reflects a narrow-minded ignorance, and a community disregard for individual rights insured under the law, that should deprive the said community of the right to administer the laws of the State by elected or appointed members of that community.

A jury of the character responsible for this miscarriage of justice destroys the confidence of every American citizen in the jury system of the State. The disgrace is not confined to the town and county in which it occurred, but is a matter of concern for the entire State, and particularly for every officer engaged in the administration and enforcement of the laws of the State.

It would take but few cases of this sort to inspire disrespect for all enforcement authority, and disregard for all law. Virginia, as a State, proud of its culture, and a history replete with honorable action in support of the principle of individual rights for its citizens, must act immediately to wipe out this grave reflection on its honor, and on the memories of the great warriors of the State who sacrificed their lives and fortunes in the name of liberty. J. E. FARRELL.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

May I impose another viewpoint regarding the Edith Maxwell case, called forth in response to the letter signed "W. J. G."? The writer alludes to Trigg Maxwell defending the rights of "his own house."

Can any parent, who conceives and brings forth children, speak of the domicile in which these children live, as a purely parental, or, in this case, paternal possession? What right has any man to cause the birth of a child, if he does not intend to share the possession of that home with his child? And what does a home imply, if not the first place where a child has the right to develop according to his God-given nature and faculties? And not only the right to do it, but the right to demand that the parents, who are instrumental for his being in the world, assist in every possible way in the furthering of this development.

If Edith Maxwell did not leave the "repulsive mountain retreat," as the writer suggests, was it not rather because of her devotion to her mother, in a desire to do what she could to brighten the life of this forlorn little woman?

W. J. G. rejects the right of those who, at a length of distance removed, pass judgment on the decision of a jury of another State or county. Have the Virginia mountaineers the right to establish a code of justice, proper to their few miles of mountain region, entirely distinct and apart from justice as represented in any other of our counties or States? Are they following the doctrines of a Hitler or a Stalin, or do they claim to be part and parcel of the spirit of our United States?

A SUBSCRIBER.
Washington, November 28.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Do we find an opponent to the many hundreds of sympathizers of the mountain school teacher, Miss Edith Maxwell? Yes, but that will not slow down the contributions to the noble cause of carrying the case to higher courts for justice, whether it be for or against Miss Edith Maxwell. However, from information to date, it seems that it will be in favor of the school teacher.

Miss Maxwell had tasted the ways of civilization, but that was no reason to keep her from returning to her native haunts. She had every right to return if she wished. Then what is midnight in this day and time? Millions of people do not return to their homes until early morning hours, but it is not considered wrong.

In family quarrels people lose their heads—they do not realize what they say or do until after the storm. This is the case of nearly every family quarrel. And when you mix intoxicating drinks and butcher knives with hectic words, there is some excuse for a person losing his or her head, as was in the case of Miss Edith Maxwell with her father, who was intoxicated at the time. I do not say that Mr. Maxwell meant to murder his daughter with the knife, but he had no right whatever to use it even as a threatening gesture.

It is true that a death occurred, but I do not believe it was premeditated. I believe that it was accidental. JAMES NOLAN.
Washington, November 28.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Just a word concerning the trial and conviction of Edith Maxwell. My personal opinion is that the jury's verdict was one of the most unreasonable and ridiculous verdicts ever rendered by a jury in Virginia.

In the first place, who would think of her killing a man with a slipper, and, in the second place, if she did she was only defending herself against a man who was crazed with liquor and (according to the evidence) threatening her life simply because she would not do just as he said. Now I haven't an idea but that her ideas of right and wrong were fully equal to his; at any rate, she was old enough to judge for herself.

I have just noticed where several women's organizations have concluded to take steps to try to gain her a new trial and possibly absolute freedom. If they succeed in their attempt I can only say hurrah for the women of old Virginia. Surely in all this fair land there must be some attorney who will come forward and defend this girl at a reasonable price. If so, I will gladly lend a helping hand and at the last hour will pass out with the thought on my mind that I had done one thing worth while.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have been intending to send a dollar to the fund being raised for the Maxwell girl, but have kept putting it off; however, on reading in your paper today the letter signed by W. J. G., Arlington, Va., I am impelled to do so at once.

I gather from W. J. G.'s letter that in his opinion the verdict of the jury should settle the matter. It seems to me, however, that a person convicted has the right of appeal to the higher courts of the State. But maybe I am wrong.

The Post Impressionist

Ennobling Passion.

Post Office, Monday.

OUR friend the Bureau Chief used to quote: "All the world loves a lover." His haughty secretary quoted the phrase more often. The stenographer disputed the relative merits of screen lovemakers. Even the hard-boiled clerks admitted: "When a guy's in love, why, it kind of brings out his best qualities, don't it?"

All except Conrad. He was too shy to say anything—especially anything of such sort. He'd been working in that Government bureau for three years: its most popular employe, having a variety of virtues, one or other of which appealed especially to one or other of his associates. Every time the Post-Impressionist dropped in about something else, they were sure to say something laudatory—about Conrad.

The Chief said: "Conrad's so industrious."

The Chief's secretary said: "Conrad's so reserved."

The stenographers said: "Gosh, but he's thoughtful!"

His fellow clerks chorused: "He's a swell lender!"

We felt we'd like to know such a paragon better—in, so to speak, his unofficial capacity. For long, though, this seemed impossible.

We asked him to lunch, and to the evening moovies: he replied (1) that he never liked to spare time for a midday meal—just brought a thermos to the office—and (2) that he took work home with him o' nights. We inquired why; his answer was a self-contained smile. He would thoughtfully find us a seat whenever we had to wait for the Chief. Once, when we'd left our wallet in our own shop, Conrad insisted on lending us five dollars, instead of a simple taxi-fare.

So we rubbed our eyes when we reached our little desk last Monday. Blocks away, the Chief's bureau must have been at its busiest. Yet here was Conrad seated on one of our two chairs, his feet resting nonchalantly on the other chair. Moreover, he was saying:

"Hello, fella!" Nor did he disturb his feet as he added: "Lemme a ten-spot for a couple o' weeks."

He said: "I've got to buy some flowers, so I want your advice."

On their selection? No; on the heart of the prospective beneficiary. Did we think she gave a hoot for him, honest?

Conrad had fallen in love!

She was blonde: didn't we prefer blondes? She was little: weren't they nicer little? Why, when he told her he was pleased to meet her, she assured him she'd been wanting him to for ages: did we think she meant that? Why did we think she meant that? Well, if we did think she meant it, what did we think she meant by it?

He paused only for replies. But he insisted on replies: real replies. Some people will take "Um" for an answer—not Conrad-in-love.

"Why, listen——"

We intimated that we had to write a column a day.

He said he knew that, but wait a minute: he wanted to ask our advice—he just had to have our advice. That was the first time he'd met her: that time he'd just been telling us about. Well, then, the next time, a queer thing happened; he couldn't explain it, and he wished we would.

Well, he asked her did she like the moovies, and she said: "The screen's a revelation." Right like that: generally, a screen's something that hides something, isn't it? But here she said a film-screen was the opposite. Didn't that show she had brains? What did we think about these people who said brains and looks never went together?

We told Conrad we had never thought anything concerning the subject, but we'd ask the composing room when we took our column down—and that would have to be soon.

Conrad said, yes, but what did we think we thought?

Besides, that wasn't what he wanted our advice on. What he wanted our advice on was this:

Well, he asked her who did she like in the movies, and she said Clark Gable; he was always playing parts where he was a hard worker and a strong-silent man, but thoughtful to women and generous and all. Well, you know, that was just what people said about him (Conrad) at the office. And—well—did we think she could a-heard 'em? Well, but did we? Well, then, did we think she was just kidding him, or did she—oh, well, you know—like that sort of a guy, honest?

We had to send a surreptitious note out to Miss Scaife to ask her to come in and tell us that the boss wanted to see us immediately.

* * *

The next time we went to Conrad's office, Conrad wasn't there. The Chief said: "He was too lazy." The clerks said: "He was always making a touch." The Chief's secretary said: "Mr. Conrad talked too much." The stenographers said: "Gosh, he got the idea there wasn't but one girl in the world!"

Ceremony Of The Keys.

Gibraltar, Nov. 30.

THE parade of the wooden soldiers, officially known as the Ceremony of the Keys, is held Wednesday evening at sundown at the landport gate of the fortress of Gibraltar. It is a needless reminder of the scrubby and harmless Spaniards who are permitted to work at menial jobs in the English settlement of the carelessness by which their own nation lost the key to the Mediterranean and the Eastern seas.

It is also a perfect demonstration of the robot nature of the thoroughly disciplined soldier. The ceremony of the keys has become today merely an expression of the little boy character of the professional man of arms.

In the beginning it was not a ceremony but a practical precaution. The British took Gibraltar in 1704 by landing suddenly and walking right in. In the same year and again in 1779 the Spaniards tried to take it back. The second attempt was a three-year siege, but Sir George Eliott always kept the gates locked.

After the siege Sir George wished to impress on all his subordinates and successors the importance of locking the gates at night and keeping the keys in a safe place. So he wore them on his sword belt and appointed a sergeant keeper of the keys. The sergeant was accompanied on his rounds by an armed guard. Having turned the keys in the locks, he returned to the Governor's house and handed them over to the Governor, who put them back in his belt.

In the years since then the gates have become merely historical landmarks, for the fortifications have been moved up the rock and the Spaniards have acknowledged the futility of trying to recapture Gibraltar.

• • • •

ON the land side behind the rock there is a neutral zone, or no man's land, about half a mile wide, traversed by a motor road, with a passport and a customs office at each boundary.

The contrast between an ambitious nation and a country which has simply chucked it and doesn't give a damn any more is apparent at the two ends of this road.

On the British side a Gordon Highlander walks his post as though he were full of clockwork and someone had wound him up. He turns square corners in measured beats. There is neither expression in his face nor muscular action in his movements. He does as he does because the gears inside are turning with tradition as the mainspring unwinds.

The English streets are clean. The English bobbies are big, erect and majestic. At the other end is a dirty frontier station manned by soiled and rumpled guards, who smoke if they like and shave only if it's their pleasure. Aloof, sinister, dirty and always menacing are the three civil guards in their patent leather hats.

• • • •

THE escort of the key sergeant on this occasion was that of the King's own Yorkshire Light Infantry, known as the Koylis. They wear scarlet jackets with gold and white trimmings, and their sergeant wears in addition magnificent gold epaulets and a white belt and red sash. They form on the parade ground and march to the Governor's house, where they flourish their silver bugles and play a few rousing snorts of repetitious music to summon the sergeant.

After some time he comes strutting from the mansion with a mechanical stride and a mechanical swing to his arms, dangling the keys about a foot long from a ring the size of a small hoop. Now three sergeants emerge from the guard room and cross the square and fall in, one on each side, the third behind him, with bayonets gleaming to protect the keys on the march to the landport gate.

This march ends in Barrack Square, where the key sergeant falls out attended by bayonets and proceeds with heavy dehumanized steps into a sort of tunnel. Meanwhile, the band plays the bugle music in a shrill, monotonous tone over and over and the buglers execute robot movements with astonishing precision at the command of the sergeant.

• • • •

NOW they rest, and three officers in mufti approach to inspect and criticize. The robots make no human sign as the officers point to this one and that one, like judges in a show ring giving an impersonal appraisal to horses and dogs. To do so would be a ghastly faux pas. The officers are withdrawn, and the key sergeant with his guard, having loitered an appropriate interval in the gateway, is deemed to have performed the ceremony of locking the gates against the Spaniards.

The sergeant gives a yell, which touches off a certain impulse in the mechanical men in the gaudy uniforms, and they set off again for the Governor's house, where the key sergeant turns in the keys. Now the sergeant gives a final yell, and the robots walk around the corner. I didn't see what happened there, but I am sure they all fell down, as wooden soldiers always do when the music stops.

Murphy And The Philippines

Ex-Governor General Praised For Work In Islands.

By Vicente Albano Pacis,
Special Correspondence of The Post.
Manila, P. I.

FRANK MURPHY, the last Governor General of the Philippines and the first American High Commissioner to the Philippine Commonwealth—how well has he fulfilled his twofold assignment of concluding an old regime and initiating a new one?

As the last governor general, his mission, obviously, was to wind up the political training of the Filipinos within the limits allowed by the Jones law, the organic act which is about to be replaced by the Tydings-McDuffie independence law. As the first American High Commissioner, he has to set the course of the new state. Frank Murphy, in both jobs, has done considerably more than he has so far been given credit for.

Winding up the old regime, he has extended every facility for political training to the Filipinos. He revived the old Council of State which Gen. Leonard Wood had abolished. He also returned to the policy of Francis Burton Harrison of appointing members of the Legislature to the cabinet. Both schemes resulted in giving the Filipinos some share in the executive powers.

• • • •

WHEN William Howard Taft established the civil government of 1901, he set down the policy of giving the Filipinos all the jobs in the government which they were ready to assume. The Taft plan immediately resulted in placing in the hands of Filipinos all the elective positions in the municipal and provincial governments.

In 1907, when the Philippine Assembly was organized under the Cooper act, the Filipinos advanced in their political training by assuming half of the responsibility for national legislation. Up to 1916, of course, when the Senate was organized under the Jones law, the commission with a majority of Americans—except during its last few years—was the upper chamber of the insular Legislature. When the Philippino Senate was organized, the Filipinos assumed the responsibility for the entire government, save the executive branch which the governor general continued to control.

Francis Burton Harrison, to be sure, originated both the semi-parliamentary system of government and the council of state, but his effort to train the Fllipinos for executive responsibility was all but stopped when Gen. Wood came to Malacanan, as the "palace" of the governor general is called.

From 1921, when Harrison resigned from the governor generalship, to two and a half years ago, when Murphy was inaugurated chief executive, the Filipinos, excepting as members of the cabinet, had no participation in executive affairs.

Murphy changed the order of things by forthwith re-creating the council of state in which the only American members are the governor general and the vice governor, and appointing senators and representatives to the cabinet. As, in effect, the council is the highest governing body, and since it includes the Senate president and the speaker and its overwhelming majority is Filipino, the Filipinos became real insiders in Malacanan.

FRANK MURPHY.
No "Oriental" Mind To Him.

And since the ranking members of the cabinet are primarily ranking members of the Legislature, the Legislature also secured some control of the cabinet. The result was a veritable sharing of the executive powers with the Filipinos. Having for a decade run the judiciary, the local governments and the Legislature, the Filipinos under Murphy also obtained considerable executive experience.

• • • •

WITH respect to the Commonwealth, Murphy's work is unsung, yet it is truly monumental. It may be conveniently catalogued under the following headings: (1) Giving the Commonwealth a foundation of all-round stability; (2) establishing an era of good feeling among Philippine political factions, and (3) inducing President Roosevelt to call an economic conference for the purpose of adjusting Philippine-American economic relations.

Murphy's work of stabilizing the situation for the Commonwealth consists in getting the government out of the red and in placing the government squarely behind a new and all-embarrassing social and economic policy. Through the system of central budget control which he inaugurated, he made the government spend 1,500,000 pesos less than its income in 1933, and 6,893,000 less than in 1934. During the three years previous to his inauguration the government had spent an aggregate of over 23,000,000 pesos more than its income.

Outside of public health and sanitation, the government had not paid much attention to social problems. Murphy made the government shoulder unemployment relief, the care of the insane and of abnormal children, the relief of typhoon, flood and other victims of calamities. While the government was steadily shrinking its budget to adjust it to the dwindling income, the bill for social service rose from a negligible amount to over 3,000,000 pesos in 1935.

Closely connected with the social program was Murphy's reform of Philippine penology, consisting in the introduction of the indeterminate sentence, of the office of public defenders, of the adult probation sentence and the practcal abolition of capital punishment.

MURPHY'S liaison work is most important. It is now generally known that it was his advice to President Roosevelt that resulted in the enactment by Congress of the second independence law, known as the Tydings-McDuffie law. When the Philippine Legislature refused to accept the first liberty law, Congress might have considered Philippine independence a closed matter, had not Murphy urged Roosevelt to take the initiative in reopening the question. Murphy steered things so that the march to independence continued, and the fighting political factions in the Philippines made peace.

As the Filipinos consider the economic terms of the independence law suicidal, the economic conference to be called is tantamount to the proverbial straw to a drowning man. And Murphy is mainly responsible for it. It was his representations, made by radio and in person at the White House, that led Roosevelt to decide on the conference. If it will result in eliminating what the Filipinos consider the unjust economic terms of independence, Murphy will have rendered a signal service to the Commonwealth.

Of coure, by being the first commissioner, although it is known that he is soon leaving to run for Governor of Michigan, Murphy will have the unique opportunity of setting up the standards of the office, and of establishing the essential precedents in the relations between the commissioner and the Filipino President.

"I do not believe in the existence of the Oriental or Filipino mind," Murphy told me the other day. "I came here without prejudices. To these facts, I attribute what little success I have had here."

No End Of Books

By Theodore Hall

Aleck.

JUST the other evening, in the apartment of a chap I know, I was exposed to one of the hazards of this life. He had gone out of the room for a while, leaving the radio still mumbling to itself. Now I respected my host, or I should have turned off the contraption with a twist, which would have left its innards non compos cerporis for a week. I do not, let me put it mildly, like the radio. But stoicism is the better part of valor, and so I tried to deal with a magazine. On and on went that voice in the corner, with the sweet, lubricatory unctuousness, the sublimely artificial bathos, which only the Hertzian waves could bring twice into our parlors. Writhing, I could not but listen.

Don't ask me to imitate the tenor of that monologue in print. Its peculiar savor must be rendered unto Caesar. When, after a bit, the words "Groucho Marx" came clear, I scented a movie puff ad, but then what the deuce was Helen Keller doing in the speaker's next sentence? The two (incongruity of incongruities!) had met, and it seemed to the speaker—but let him say it; I feel suddenly unable—"My prophetic soul," he said, "knew that they were to become life-long friends." Sweet spirits of glycerine!

"Who," I asked my host when he had returned to the blessedly silent room (yes, my stoicism had worn thin), "who on earth was that?" And I pointed, still trembling. He told me. For the very first time I had heard Mr. Alexander Woollcott on the air, and—may Allah be merciful!—the last.

• • • •

WE are, as you must have been sapient to notice, discussing, in a way, the very heart of style—the permission a mind will grant itself to use certain locutions. If you were to ask a gold-medal rifle marksman how he achieves his scores on the target, you would find that he lets the good shots take care of themselves, that he concentrates on not making bad ones. It is the same with literary style. Every one of us, in penning a letter, reaches to an occasional felicity. But the distinctive mark of the adept is that he never permits himself an infelicity. He fears the bad shots as he fears the wrath to come.

And the old Italian hand of Mr. Woollcott, I am constrained to say, shows but a pittance of such fear.

THIS need not, however, deter us from a considerable enjoyment of "The Woollcott Reader" (Viking Press, $3). Out of the 1,010 pages of this plump anthology, there are but 38 (not counting his 16-page translation from the French) by the gleaming-eyed editor. That gleam, he tells us, is of the proselytizer, eager to convert us to the admiration of his favorite books and short pieces. Coyly as only our editor can write, he persuades us toward the merits (saccharine, or oh, so meaningful) of "Margaret Ogilvy," "The Dolly Dialogues," "A Doctor of the Old School," "Mr. Fortune's Maggot," "The Bar Sinister," "Cardinal Manning," "In the Green Mountain Country," "A Handful of Dust," and so on through the range of seven complete books, one biography, one play, four essays, two long stories, one short story and the aforesaid translation. All of this lies within these covers.

And to each item is assigned a Woollcottian afterword—"anecdotal," the publishers call them—which means that we hear that Mr. Evelyn Waugh's father served as office boy to Wolcott Balestier, Mr. Kipling's brother-in-law; that the stone carver of Coolidge's gravestone took his model of the eagle and "E Pluribus Unum" from a 25-cent piece; that Woolcott once asked Lytton Strachey where he got a certain incident in "Elizabeth and Essex," and Strachey replied, "Oh, that; I invented it."

There is also an "Envoy," in which Mr. Woollcott explains that it was too late to include other choice pieces, "unless you, as the reader, and the undersigned, as the editor, should work together so congenially that, instead of being ignominiously left down, we might one day be promoted to the Second Reader."

Somehow I think I'd better keep out of this, but for one word.

• • • •

YOU remember, no doubt, the man who was telling his friend about the show down at the Hippodrome in New York. "They've got a lot of naked girls riding around on elephants, and," he said, "it's pretty good if you haven't seen an elephant in a long while."

Well, "The Woollcott Reader" is really prety good if you haven't read Barrie, Anthony Hope, Ian Maclaren, Sylvia Townsend Warner, Richard Harding Davis, Lytton Strachey, Clarence Day, Evelyn Waugh, etc., and etc., of late.

Navy Dirigibles Are Defended By Rosendahl

Commander Declares Ships Never Had Real Chance to Prove Capacity.

By the Associated Press.

Defending the continuous use of dirigibles by the Navy, Commander C. E. Rosendahl, former ace airship navigator, said yesterday that past lighter-than-air catastrophes "in no way justified cessation of airship development at this time."

Rosendahl criticized the Government for its at least temporary halt in building rigid lighter-than-air craft, following the disasters which ended the service of the Shenandoah, Akron and Macon. He said this type of ship had not yet been given a chance to prove its capacity in this country.

Writing in the National Aeronautical Magazine for December, Rosendahl reviewed the American experiments with dirigibles, saying that in the entire world only ten such ships have been built since the World War.

"Of these," he wrote, "the Bodensee and Nordstern were seized by the Allies and soon dismantled. The British R-38 failed structurally during an early trial flight and burned in the air due to its hydrogen.

"The 4-101 flew into a low hill in France and was totally consumed by hydrogen fire. The 4-100, a radical departure and unpromising ship, was dismantled.

"In the United States the Shenandoah failed structurally in flight and was wrecked. The Akron flew into the sea and sank. The Macon, as a result of deferred reinforcement at a structural location where it was known to be necessary, failed structurally in flight and sank in the Pacific. The Los Angeles, built in Germany as a reparations ship, although now more than 12 years of age, is still in good condition. The Graf Zeppelin is now in her eighth year of successful operation."

Anti-Liquor Fight Urged by Bishop

Georgia ChurchmanSounds Dry Meeting Keynote.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Dec. 1.—"Liquor is in the saddle at Washington and its apologists are riding whip and spur through all the States," Bishop W. N. Ainsworth of the Southern Methodist Church charged today in the keynote address at the Antisaloon League of America's convention.

The Macon, Ga., churchman's speech was heralded by dry leaders as the souding cry of a new crusade against alcohol by a rejuvenated Antisaloon League.

"No wolf-pack ever exhibited greater thirst for blood than the liquor and brewing interests are now exhibitng in their purpose to enslave the masses in habits of drink and then deliver them like cattle to the politicians for their political purposes," he asserted.

"This unrestrained program is both the indictment and peril of an Administration that has done many things of genuine merit."

Bishop Ainsworth said it already had become evident that "alcoholic liquor is not a closed issue in this republic" and that "a deepening purpose to rethink the whole program is under way."

President May Go To '36 Convention

Eastern City Seen Slated for Party Conclave.

A source close to the White House hinted yesterday that President Roosevelt might attend the 1936 Democratic national convention.

Asked if party leaders desired to have the convention held in an Eastern city, this spokesman said:

"Maybe. The President might want to go, and he would not want to travel too far."

Philadelphia has been under consideration by Democratic leaders, it was learned, but the question of money remains a prime consideration in the choice of the host city.

Poll of Church Group Favors U. S. Isolation

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—Incomplete returns from a Nation-wide plebiscite on war and peace conducted by a church group showed today a preponderant vote in favor of national isolation through strict neutrality legislation and Government control of munitions industry.

The council for social action of the Congregational and Christian churches announced that only 7 per cent of the 54,563 persons voting signified their intention of supporting the United States in "any war which it may declare."

Rumania Will Support OnlyUnanimous Oil Ban

Bucharest, Dec. 1 (U.P.).—Rumania, one of the world's leading oil producers, will continue to supply petroleum to Italy unless all otner oil exporters—including neutrals—agree to cooperate in the proposed League of Nations oil embargo against the Fascist government, it was reported here today.

The usually well-informed Argus, semiofficial daily newspaper, said King Carol's foreign office already has notified the League of this decision.

Master Dies With Dog.

Bucharest, Dec. 1 (AP).—During one of the autumn hunting parties, Al Dudcovchi, aged member of the Rumanian Hunting Association, died of apoplexy after realizing he had killed his pet dog, mistaking him for a hare. Master and dog were buried in the same grave.

Brazil Fires Officials In 'Purge' of Rebels

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 1 (AP).—Authorities today continued their "purge" against officials suspected of participating in the Communist-led rebellion which was crushed after five days.

Two officials were dismissed from office, Anisio Spinola Teixeira, secretary of education for the federal district, and Capt. Hercolino Cascardo, delegate for ports in the state of Santa Catharina. Maj. Carlos Leite was arrested in Bage, state of Rio Grande Do Sul.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Screening the Quints.

Hollywood's movie men are en route to the Ontario backwoods to put the Dionne quintuplets into the pictures. It may turn out to be a plot to develop five Shirley Temples.

• • • •

Darryl Zanuck will do the directing. It will be Zanuck's really big test. Anybody who can get one baby to do as directed is good, and a man who can make five follow orders is a miracle man.

• • • •

The quints will get $50,000. But they would rather have lollipops.

• • • •

The big surprise is that Dr. Dafoe will not appear in the picture. The studio has cast Jean Hersholt for the part of the physician. Dr. Dafoe doesn't look enough like Dr. Dafoe.

• • • •

• • • •

Whether Ma and Pa Dionne will be in the picture is not being disclosed. Maybe they don't look convincing to Hollywood either.

• • • •

But it is to be hoped Mr. Zanuck doesn't tell them to go out and get a reputation.

• • • •

The quints will appear before the camera for less than a half hour daily. Which is fair enough, as the cameraman will only have to struggle with the quints for the same period.

• • • •

Before the picture has been completed both sides will know what screen temperament really is.

• • • •

The picture is to be called "The Country Doctor." This disposes of rumors that it would go into the cinema palaces as "She Done Him Wrong," or "The Children's Hour."

• • • •

And it's a great relief to Papa Dionne. He was afraid they might call it "V-Man."

Presumably the scenario will glorify the country doctor. And it's about time. There are few more heroic types than the small-town physician who answers all calls at $2 per visit and can always be reached when a patient wants him.

The country doctor is rapidly disappearing. The modern physician thinks $2 is a cover charge. And the prospect of an all-night buggy ride through a blizzard is enough to drive him into some other business.

So here's to the glorification of Dr. Dafoe! Even if he turns out to be Jean Hersholt.

Auto-Parts Group Shuns NRA Parley

Further Bureaucratic Rule Feared by Industry.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Dec. 1.—C. O. Skinner, assistant general manager of the Automotive Parts & Equipment Manufacturers, Inc., said today the organization has declined to participate in the conference called for December 9 by Maj. George L. Berry, NRA industrial co-ordinator.

In a letter to Berry, Skinner said, the organization declared it regards the meeting as "untimely" and as tending "toward further bureaucratic control of industry, with which we have already had an unsatisfactory experience."

The letter said the parts industry now employed more than 180,000 workers, with a pay roll "higher than at any time in its history," and suggested that progress "can now best be stimulated by an expression by the Administration that the progress already made justifies its confidence in our ability to run our own business in the proper interests of all parties."

Natives Shun Jijiga In Fear of Bombing

Addis Ababa, Dec. 1 (Reuters).—Anticipating a mass attack by Italian airplanes within the next few days, the majority of the population are evacuating the city of Jijiga during the daytime, reports to this capital said today.

Jijiga is in the center of the area of distribution of munitions from British Somaliland. Trucks dash through the town all through the night.

Don't Mention It.

New Camera Speeds Sound Photographs

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 1 (AP). Construction of an electric sound "camera" that reduces from days to seconds the time needed to make a picture record of tone quality was announced tonight by Harry H. Hall, instructor in physics at Harvard University.

The machine was built at the Cruft Laboratory of Electric Communication Engineering.

Through these tone pictures, Hall explained, the sounds of musical instruments can be studied and minute differences in tone between fine and ordinary instruments can be discovered and scientifically analyzed.

To the scientist the chief advantage of the new instrument is its speed. In 3.78 seconds a complete picture of a sound can be obtained.

V. F. W. Names Group to Push Congress Bills

Van Zandt Stresses Need for Preparedness Against War.

By the Associated Press.

Appointment of a committee on national defense to represent the Veterans of Foreign Wars before Congressional committees was announced yesterday by Commander in Chief James E. Van Zandt.

"War and threats of the war the world over make American military preparedness vital at this time," Van Zandt said, adding that the Ethiopian campaign "threatens to spread into a general European conflict."

Wise national economy, he asserted, "should not allow the Army and Navy to suffer."

The committee, headed by Lieut. Col. George E. Ijams, assistant administrator of the Veterans' Administration, includes Col. Julian Burrus, commandant of Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va.; Gen. A. M. Tuthill, Phoenix, Ariz.; Ray Flemming, adjutant general of Louisiana; Col. Hamilton Gardner, Salt Lake City; Col. Thomas Tierney, surgeon general of Massachusetts; Neil W. Kimball, adjutant general of Colorado; Col. W. P. Screws, Montgomery, Ala.; Capt. Richard C. O'Connell, Baltimore, Md.; Col. Phil Westhfahl, Milwaukee, Wis.; Capt. Clarence Quigley, Great Bend, Kans.; Maj. Harvey Miller, U. S. M. C. (retired), Washington; Maxwell O. Thrower, St. Augustine, Fla.; Lee W. Brawford, Esterville, Iowa; Charles F. Hackett, jr., Parker, S. Dak.

Father Coughlin Replies to Critics

Wants Only to Perfect, Not Destroy New Deal.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Dec. 1.—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, replying this afternoon to criticism of his recent attack on some of the major policies of the Roosevelt Administration, declared "it is not my purpose to destroy but perfect the New Deal."

Declaring that he was opposed to the "extravagant experiments and reactionary tendencies" of the New Deal, Father Coughlin asserted in his Sunday afternoon broadcast on a national hook-up:

"Without the promises of the New Deal and its humanitarian activities I firmly believe that the red flag of bloody revolution would have been hoisted in this fair land."

His role of a New Deal critic, he said, was to oppose "certain practices of the New Deal," not its philosophy.

Franco-Spanish Treaty To End Trade War Near

Madrid, Dec. 1 (AP).—The trade war between France and Spain today was expected to be brought to an end with the early signing of a trade agreemennt.

The methods governing Spain's payment for goods are yet to be threshed out, after which Spanish officials hope Georges Bonnet, French minister of commerce, will come to Madrid to affix his signature to the pact. Terms of the treaty were not made public, although they are understood in shipping circles to provide lower tariffs for Spanish fruits.

Report Urges Navy Increase Of Man-Power

Shortage of Enlisted Force Dangerous to Defense, Leahy Warns.

By the Associated Press.

Increases in personnel strength to man the full treaty Navy with its essential war complement were urged yesterday in the annual report of Rear Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

A shortage of both officers and enlisted men forced the Navy to cruise through the 1935 fiscal year with a substantially undermanned fleet, he said.

In his own report Saturday, Secretary Swanson called attention to the uncertainty of the outcome of the forthcoming London Naval Treaty Conference and recommended that the American Navy be built up to full treaty strength.

Dangerous to Defense.

Emphasizing that it was "dangerous to the national defense" for ship's' complements to fall below 85 per cent of full enlisted strength, Leahy's report said the average enlisted force of 81,510 maintained during the year made it possible to man combatant ships to only 81 per cent of their needs.

Similarly, it was said, line officer personnel of 6,320 was more than 1,500 below the number necessary to man fully the treaty navy now authorized and building.

Even with an expansion of facilities at the Naval Academy at Annapolis for turning out large numbers of officers, it was said the requisite personnel could not be obtained before 1945 or later.

88,000 Force Ordered.

Since the period covered by the report, an enlisted force of 88,000 men has been authorized by Congress. This, Leahy said, should allow all combatant fleet vessels to reach the desired 85 per cent of complement.

It was added, however, that the Bureau of Navigation's responsibility for manning the whole naval establishment "extends beyond provision of personnel for the active fleet."

"It must maintain mobilization plans which contemplate in addition complete manning of useful combatant vessels in reduced commission, the manning of useful combatant vessels that are decommissioned and the manning of many auxiliaries that will be obtained from the merchant marine in time of war."

Grade Crossing Deaths Increase

Fatalities resulting from highway-grade crossing accidents totaled 130 in August, the safety section of the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was an increase of six compared with the number of fatalities in August last year. Reports showed 248 accidents at grade crossings in August, an increase of two compared with August, 1934. In those accidents 246 persons were injured, an increase of 52 compared with the same month the preceding year.

In the first eight months of 1935 there were 2,291 accidents at highway-railroad grade crossings, or an increase of 21 compared with the corresponding period in 1934. In those accidents 983 persons lost their lives, or an increase of 32 compared with the corresponding period last year.

Edward E. Rapleys Leave for Florida

Miami Beach House Leased for Winter Season.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Everett Rapley, who have spent the past two months in Washington with the latter's sister, Mrs. Charles A. McKenney, in her home on Rhode Island avenue, left the Capital yesterday afternoon for Miami Beach, Fla., where they have leased a house for the winter season. They were accompanied by their little granddaughter, Mary Rapley, daughter of Mr. William W. Rapley.

Mr. William Rapley will return to Washington Wednesday from South Carolina, where he has spent the past ten days bird shooting. Mr. Rapley will go to Florida later this month to join his family for the Christmas holidays.

Dance for Young Folks Dropped From Roosevelt Holiday Fetes

Christmas Eve Tree Lighting, Family Dinner and Children's Party to Be Retained; President's Mother to Visit.

The Roosevelt five-generation Christmas celebration will be minus its young folks' ball this year because there is no one to give it for.

But maybe a brand-new electric White House kitchen, and all the Christmas cheer it can bring, will make up for one less party on the Christmas calendar that was made public yesterday by Mrs. Roosevelt.

There'll be the usual Christmas Eve lighting of the Nation's tree, with the President broadcasting greetings and the Presidential family reviewing the out-door pageantry, the usual family party Christmas night; the traditional children's party, on December 28.

But no dance. The President's Harvard College sons, Franklin, jr., and John, just naturally wouldn't want a dance given for them.

Honored Miss Cushing.

Last year the December 29 dance honored Miss Barbara Cushing, whose sister married the President's son, James; and Miss Jean Martineau, daughter of the President's cousin. It brought an orchestra down from New York; eight girls as Roosevelt house guests, and a dozen boys into New Years' headquarters at a nearby hotel.

Mrs. Roosevelt listed as certain to be present for the holiday festivities the President's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, his half-sister-in-law, Mrs. J. R. Roosevelt, both of Hyde Park, N. Y.

Back to the White House where they have lived the past two winters will come "Sistie" and "Buzzie" Dall, grandchildren of the President, with their mother, Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, and her husband, John Boettiger, all of New York.

Family Guests.

On the tentative list of the family party are Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt and their small daughter Sara, of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, however, have decided to remain at their home at Fort Worth, Tex. A New Year's eve party was given last year for these two married couples—another event to be missing from the 1935 calendar. The previous year, all the Roosevelt young folks joined in a New Year's eve ball in the East Room.

Thus the Christmas party for the small children remains the most tenacious tradition in the White House celebration. Last Administration it belonged to Peggy Ann and Peter Hoover. The New Deal delivered it to small Eleanor and Curtis Dall, called "Sistie" and "Buzzie."

The White House kitchens are nearing completion and will cook the Christmas dinner.

Soviet Satire To Be Offered Dec. 10 and 11

Studio of Theater Arts to Present 'Squaring Circle' as Season Opener.

The Studio of Theater Arts will open the subscription season with the presentation of the Soviet farce, "Squaring the Circle," December 10 and 11. The second play of the season will be produced in February and the third in April.

"Squaring the Circle," is a satire on the system of registering and "unregistering" which until recently comprised the marriage and divorce laws of the Soviet. Written by Valentine Kataw, it has been described as the funniest piece of writing that has come out of the new Russia.

Among those who have made reservations are: Dr. and Mrs. Lyman J. Briggs, Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, Miss Sibyl Baker, Dr. and Mrs. DeWitt C. Croissant, Miss Emma T. Hahm, Mrs. Richard V. Oulahan, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pearlman, Mrs. Carl A. Droop, Miss Olive Adams, Miss Alice Ball, Miss Rosemary Ball, Mr. and Mrs. Paul D. Banning, Miss Florence C. Bell, Mrs. James V. Bennett, Mr. S. Smith, of Broad Run, Fauquier County, were married Friday morning in Washington by Dr. Albert Evans, of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Miss Zehmer is a member of the faculty of the Warrenton High School. Mr. Smith, member of the firm of the Blackwell Engineering and Construction Co. of Warrenton, is a brother of Mrs. Packard Laird, of Chesterbrook farm, Philadelphia and a nephew of Mrs. Frank Winter of Washington.

Le Sieur-Claffy Rites Are Held In St. Charles'

Bride First to Be Both Christened and Wed by Father Curran.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Arlington County, Dec. 1.—A wedding of much interest in Arlington County took place on Thanksgiving morning at 9:45 o'clock in St. Charles' Catholic Church, Clarendon, Va., when Miss Agnes Louisa Le Sieur, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Le Sieur, of Clarendon, became the bride of Mr. Joseph Claffy, of Clarendon, formerly of Columbia, S. C. The Rev. J. A. Curran, assisted by the Rev. Kenneth Rizer, officiated and celebrated the nuptial mass. Mrs. Claffy has the distinction of being the first bride at St. Charles' Church to have been both christened and married by Father Curran. White chrysanthemums, ferns and palms decorated the three altars in the church, while tall white tapers burned on the altars.

The bride, who was escorted and given in marriage by her father, wore her traveling dress of black velvet, fashioned with an Elizabethan collar of white pique and rhinestone buttons trimming the front of the bodice. She wore a black velvet turban with veil and carried a large bouquet of white chrysanthemums.

Mrs. Ames C. Crounse, her sister and only attendant, was wearing a black velvet gown with white ermine collar and she carried large yellow chrysanthemums.

Mr. Robert Claffy, of Chevy Chase, Md., was his brothers best man, and Mr. Steven Le Sieur, brother of the bride, acted as usher.

A wedding breakfast for the wedding party, immediate families and the officiating clergymen followed in the home of the bride's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Crounse, in Lyon Village, Va. The young couple was assisted in receiving by the bride's mother, Mrs. Le Sieur, who was in black crepe trimmed with gold ornaments and a shoulder cluster of yellow roses.

The wedding breakfast was followed by a buffet luncheon at 11:30 o'clock for about 50 guests.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Claffy left for a wedding trip to Philadelphia to visit the latter's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Owens. They will return in a few days to Clarendon, where they will make their home during the Christmas holidays. Mr. and Mrs. Claffy will go to Columbia, S. C., where they will be the guests of Mr. Claffy's parents.

The Italy-America Society of Washington has issued invitations for Monday evening, December 9, at 9 o'clock, at the Mayflower Hotel. Dr. Lester K. Born, Ph. D., of George Washington University, will deliver an address on "Horace: A Birthday Prophecy."

Luxury Soaps Now Available At Low Price

More Allure Per Dollar Offer Further Increased By Glorified Box.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

EXPENSIVE soaps dropped out of the depression budget along with butlers and upstairs maids. Once again, however, these sudsy little luxuries are being indulged in with a semblance of the old fervor. One beauty house is encouraging this luxury revival with an enticing offer of four cakes of its famous toilet soap at $1 instead of three for the same price as of yore. The "more allure per dollar" offer is further increased by an extra dash of perfume added to the compound.

And—as if that weren't enough to convince women that they owe their complexions kind treatment of this sort, even the package is glorified. An upright, eight-sided box is shaped to fit the unusual but convenient contours of the soap. The upper two-thirds of the box is banded with a dull velvety textured black paper and the lower third with a horizontally gold-beaded paper. A drop front panel when opened reveals the four tiers of soap.

There are a trio of delightful fragrances. One is fougere of fern. The soap is colored a soft, dull green, and has a refreshing out-of-doors scent. Ideal for men! And then, there's Lilas, a lovely lilac color. And Lavendar in a creamy tone. Bath oils in the same fragrances are perfect bath companions for the soap.

The soap is grained so fine as to have a perfectly smooth mat surface. Its lather is a delicate froth of gossamer bubbles that cleanse thoroughly but ever so gently.

Slippers for Chill Nights.

IDEAL for bitter cold nights when a fire in the fireplace, and heat in the furnace still can't conquer the chill, are the wooly, warm, and comfy slipperettes. They're lovely little knit bedroom slippers that shape themselves to your foot when you put them on.

You can sleep in them if you like, or use them to pad around in your boudoir. They're ideal little things to keep on hand for they are attractive and serviceable too. They come in dainty pastel colors and brighter shades as well. You'll find they wash easily. Quite modestly priced!

Scented Bath Salts.

JUST in time for the holiday season comes the new lilac scented, pebble type bath salts. This sweet old-fashioned scent breathes eternal spring the year round.

These crystals have a tendency to soften water and greatly increase the invigorating effects of the bath.

In addition to the new lilac odor, you may also buy Russian pine, bracing and refreshing with the spicy fragrance of a pine forest; rose geranium—the true perfume of the rose, and one called Alamanda—a pleasantly unusual scent, charmingly pungent and aromatic.

Pillow Bargains.

IF YOU'RE in the market for pillow bargains by all means call at a certain local store. They're tempting customers right and left with large, luxurious sofa cushions, soft and downy, and covered with fascinating fabrics in a variety of colors.

You'll have to see them to realize what bargains may be yours for only $1.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 323, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

IT ISN'T so smart to make a pretty room when you have lots of money to spend. It's doing it on a vanishing budget that means talent and ingenuity and lots of loving pains.

Take a lady with just enough money to buy the walnut furniture she wants for her bedroom. Her problem is—what will she do about the floor, windows and walls if she spends most of her money on furniture? Or would it be wiser to buy other furniture and have enough left to finish the room properly?

Well, we'd advise the furniture she really has her heart set on, even if it means letting the rest of the room go for a while. She could paint scalloped borders just below the moulding and above the baseboard . . . turquoise blue would be a nice color with the present ivory walls. Then get plain blue turquoise blue chintz to make a swag top for the ecru marquisette curtains she already has and finish it off at either side with a big bow of turquoise blue chintz. Have big blue chintz bows for tie backs, too. Make a bedspread of ecru marquisette to match the curtains and finish it off around the edges of the top and around the flounce with rows of scalloped blue chintz to match the borders on the walls. Make a braided rug out of old tan to beige silk stockings with rows of turquoise blue for the borders. All for the cost of a can of paint and a very few yards of plain chintz and marquisette which won't cost much.

Return to an Oak Tree.

I RECALLED a massive oak on the southern hill.
Into whose shade I came as a child
Panting after the climb and stricken still,
Hearing the crow-calls husky-hoarse and wild,
Under whose great beneficent boughs I sprawled
Breathless at seeing the cold-streaked mountains hold
That valley fiercely loved and fenced and walled
Into its squares of green and mustard-gold.

The moon-hot summer evenings I remembered,
When, escaped on stubby legs, I sat
On dewy grass, and like a black leaf a bat
Jerked downhill; and mornings in September
Rimed with the incomparable glitter of early frost
When bluejays flashed in the brown enormous boughs.

That childhood country being too long lost,
I returned in the russet time of autumn plows,
Strode up the slope and found the monstrous oak
Dead and bare of leather-leaves, its vast Body strangely small—and something broke
Between that hour and the faithful past.
Not even the cries of unseen whip-poorwills
Could make those darkening mountains more than hills.

Quiet.

SOME, WHEN dreamers choose to lie
In quiet darkness, ask them why:
The bulb, to cast its coloured shoot,
Has need of water, need of root,
Has need of earth in which to keep
Its living at the edge of sleep.
The leaf to grow, the dream to grow
An eager spike beneath the snow
Under the heaviness of earth
Requires this quiet to come to birth,
Requires this dark, requires this strength
Engendered from the earth at length
To make a coloured cup of sun,
To change these colours into one,
To seal the cup when that is done.

Symphony.

(For Hans Kindler, Conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra.)

MUSIC HAS SPEECH for every listening heart;
Not only for the sated heart that knows
No hunger of the flesh, but more for him
Who bears the sorrow of fond wishes broken,
Who hears the heartbreak in a score of woes.
To him does music rise as balm, and token
Of breaking dawn; to him the music goes,
To that high dusky gallery where he bends
In dimness, listening, captive to the spell,
The song ascends.

And when the final notes have risen,
In limpid fullness come, and soared, and gone,
He is the one who captures all the song,
Clear as a shining crystal, fired with passion,
And exquisite with pain;
Remembering, as he seeks the world again,
Only that bright dream which he found within
The soul of music, through the violin.

Riders of the Sea.

THE SEA HURLS forth to battle with the land
A horde of breakers in a wild stampede.
Each white-capped horseman, water-bomb in hand
Lashes forward his thundering dark steed.
With conquest in their roar,
The maddened legions pour
Their fury on the shore,
Ten thousand chargers pawing rock to sand,
Ten thousand riders lunging, to recede,
Then hurl their bombs once more.
The conquerors ride on. Their pounding tread
Dies out. The beach, shivering from the dread
Onslaught, searches the flotsam for her dead.

Sudden Beauty.

I LOVE TO come on beauty unaware—
To round the corner on a scarlet sea
Of poppies; or come unexpectedly
On water tumbling down a mountain stair;
Surprise a violet in its mossy lair;
A sunset tangled in a winter tree;
From breathless grass, the fluted ecstacy
Of meadow-lark on arid summer air.

To seek for beauty, brings no sure reward—
So seldom are the time and object met
That brought together loveliness before;
Better to let the errant hour accord
To fate, its chance; and owe the lovely debt
To beauty coming through a sudden door.

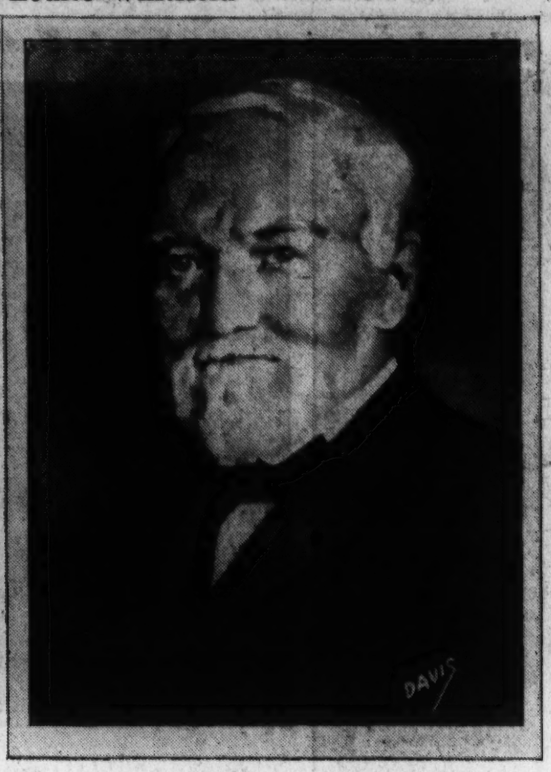
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Andrew Carnegie—Louise Whitfield



Andrew Carnegie was a young business man in New York when he met Louise Whitfield. He courted her as they rode together in Central Park. At first she refused him, but later capitulated to his wooing. They were married in 1887, and she was the inspiration of most of his achievements.

Carnegie Paid Rare Tribute to Wife's Influence in Autobiography.

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

FERDINAND in Shakespeare's "The Tempest" declared:

"Full many a lady
I've eyed with best regard: for several virtues
Have I liked several women, never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she owed,
And put it to the foil; but you, O, you,
So perfect and so peerless are created
Of every creture's best."

In his autobiography, Andrew Carnegie, writes thus of Louise Whitfield who became his wife: "I thought I knew her when she stood Ferdinand's test, but it was only the surface of her qualities I had seen and felt. Of their purity, holiness, wisdom I had not sounded the depth. In every emergency of our active, changing, and in later years somewhat public life, in all her relations with others, including my family and her own, she has proved the diplomat and peace maker. Peace and good will attend her footsteps wherever her blessed influence extends."

Such a tribute to a wife is all too rare, but Andrew Carnegie, whose centenary was celebrated last week, never failed to attribute much of his achievement in life to the influence of the woman who bore his name.

Humble Boyhood.

Peace and learning were the two guiding stars in Andrew Carnegie's life. Born in Dunfermline, Scotland, on November 25, 1835, "of poor but honest parents, of good kith and kin," the lad whose coming rejoiced the hearts of William and Margaret Morrison Carnegie seemed destined for a simple but useful life in some humble capacity in his native land. Few even of the "fey" of his community would have ventured the prediction that some day" he would walk with kings, and not lose the common touch."

From boyhood in Dunfermline, "Andy," as he was called then, absorbed poetry and romance from the historic scenes about him. His first idea of grandeur must have come from the great Abbey, Scotland's Westminster, where slept "The Bruce" with his royal kin about him. His actual schooling was scanty enought, but it was enhanced by a stock of folk lore and legend that made him a loyal Scot to the end of his days despite his later American citizenship.

Family Helper at 13.

With the introduction of steam machinery into the industrial world of Dunfermline, trade grew worse for small manufacturers such as William Carnegie. Finally he made up his mind to emigrate to the United States of which he had heard glowing tales from two sisters already settled in Pitsburgh. The looms and other implements of his trade were sold at auction and on May 17, 1848, when Andrew was in his thirteenth year, the little family embarked for the New World. It was a seven weeks trip to America on the sailing vessel and Andrew improved the time by becoming acquainted with the seamen.

In two rooms over a store in Allegheny City the new Carnegie home was established. William Carnegie began the manufacture of table cloths, selling them from door to door but with poor results. To eke out the family income Mrs. Carnegie bound shoes for a nearby shoe maker. Work was found for Andrew in a cotton factory as bobbin boy at a wage of $1.25 a week. Carnegie wrote: "I have made millions since, but none of those millions gave me such happiness as my first week's earnings. I was now a helper of the family, a bread winner, and no longer a total charge upon my parents."

His way upward to fame and riches is a twice-told tale. For a time he was a messenger boy, where he met Col. James Anderson. This kindly gentleman opened his library of 400 books to the lads of Pittsburgh. Andrew Carnegie was one of his constant patrons and there he received the inspiration for establishing free libraries throughout the country. Some years later Andrew Carnegie gave a hall and library to Allegheny City and dedicated it to Col. Anderson in memory of his kindness to him as a boy.

Met Louise Whitfield.

In the early eighties of the last century Andrew Carnegie was a successful young man in New York. Romance had not troubled him very much until one day he was introduced to Miss Louise Whitfield, daughter of a well-known New York family of position.

Both fond of riding, they frequently rode together in Central Park. She was not the only belle who accompanied the young Scotchman on his daily rides, but gradually the others became less and less important in his eyes.

In 1886 he lost his mother and his brother Tom, and was sunk in melancholy. Then his thoughts turned definitely to Louise Whitfield. He did not meet with immediate success in his courtship. Since her father's death, when she was but 21—she was then 28 years old, the care and direction of a large family had fallen upon her. Carnegie's wealth was a drawback in her eyes, for she wanted to be a real helpmeet to a man in his struggle for success. Correspondence passed between them, but one day she sent back all his letters to Carnegie, saying she felt she must put aside all thought of accepting him.

Persistent Wooer.

Carnegie did not quail at this blow. With dogged determination he continued to woo her. When he was ill, Louise Whitfield heard of him and called with friends to see him. His weakness and obvious need of her led her to change her mind. He was alone in the world. So the wedding day was fixed.

Their marriage took place in New York City on April 22, 1887, and the honeymoon was passed in the Isle of Wight. When Carnegie was presented with the freedom of the City of Edinburgh during this visit, a like honor was bestowed upon his bride.

Their life together was ideal. After a time a daughter, Margaret, was born.

When Andrew Carnegie died in 1919 the beautiful romance was over. But the memory of it lives in the hearts of those near and dear to him and in his written tributes to the one love of his life—Louise Whitfield Carnegie.

Cider Cuisine Will Add Zest To Your Meals

By Dorothea Duncan.

CIDER COOKERY is a subject with which to become acquainted during the pre-Christmas and the December holiday season. Not only is cider an admirable beverage for all of the traditional November and December festive occasions, but its zestful tang may be employed in producing a fascinating flavor to puddings, sauces, salads, ices, meats and poultry.

You will find no better accompaniment for a slice of broiled ham than the cider jelly suggested in today's dinner menu. Prepare it by the following recipe:

Cider Jelly.

2½ cups cider
1 dozen whole cloves
½ teaspoon cinnamon
6 level cups sugar
1 cup (8 ounces) commercial pectin

Measure the sugar and cider into a saucepan. Add spices. Stir and bring to a boil. Add pectin and bring again to a full boil for one minute. Remove from fire. Let stand one minute. Skim and pour quickly into sterilized glasses.

Scot Wooed the Lady of His Choice With Dogged Determination.

Human Body Suffers Greatly From Surgery

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

NOT many persons submit themselves to surgical procedures with manifestations of joy. We are all grateful for the remarkable progress made by surgery in the last two generations. Nevertheless most of us realize that no operation is 100 per cent safe nor is it foolproof. Things can happen that may delay convalescence, defeat the purpose of the operation, or even endanger life.

There are two general situations calling for expert surgery: (1) Any condition in which delay would probably mean loss of life, such as acute appendicitis with abscess formation, or obstruction of the bowel; (2) when disease attacks an important structure and bids fair to continue its ravages unless removed. Such operations are not emergency in character and as a rule should not be undertaken until the patient has been subjected to the most thorough preparation.

Advance Rest Needed.

To impose upon the body a surgical ordeal is to place a serious strain upon vital forces. The body takes a "beating," as it were, so severe that resistance is greatly lowered and no small amount of help is necessary to enable the individual to snap back to normal health. In all types of surgical procedures that need not be performed at once the patient should be prepared by rest in bed, seeking to reduce the blood pressure if it is higher than it should be, at the same time bringing about normal functioning of the gastrointestinal tract, the urinary tract, the heart, and the lungs. Should a respiratory infection (a cold) of any kind be observed, unless the operation is of immediate necessity, delay is essential.

Strict attention must be given to the psychological reaction of the patient, as fear is one of the prominent elements in the onset of what is called surgical shock. If the surroundings are as pleasant and as comfortable as circumstances will permit, and if the patient has confidence in the surgeon the operative ordeal will be faced with comparative complacency. In many instances it is wise to administer some mild hypnotic prior to the operation to assist in relieving apprehension.

Later Care Important.

Through the discoveries of new substances that will produce anesthesia and because of improved equipment, the giving of an anesthetic is today a work of art calling for more than technical skill. Back of the machinery and the chemicals must lie superior intelligence.

After the operation is over the period of post-operative care begins. Again watchfulness and skilled direction are all important. Not only is the comfort of the patient at stake, but life as well. Careful attention must be paid to the pulse as indicating the condition of the heart, to the gastrointestinal tract, and to the temperature. There is scarcely any operation that is not followed by some fever. This is due to the fact that injury to tissues, no matter how slight, is accompanied by the absorption of destroyed cells either from the tissues themselves or from the blood. The temperature may range from 99½ up to as high as 103 degress F. without indicating danger. As a rule the temperature subsides in from two to five days. A fever existing for a longer period may mean infection.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Desperate at Discovery of Love Letter From Another Woman in Husband's Pocket, Wife Confesses Herself Driven to Ask Advice.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am writing to you partly because your advice to troubled correspondents is so rational, so understanding, penetrating beneath the surface into the hearts of men and women; partly because my own situation is such that I cannot turn to my friends in my perplexity. To them I seem the sturdy oak. They turn to me for help.

They think from my appearance that I am so calm and so serene, yet underneath I am seething with a turmoil of emotions . . . It would be too humiliating to admit that after all I am not a sturdy oak, but a sapling tossed in the wind. If you, through your advice, can provide the brace to keep me straight and strong through the tempest, I shall be indebted to you forever.

My problem is the triangle that creeps into your column so often, but with a difference . . . This case is different because my husband has always been loyal, and the girl in the case is not the type your readers so often describe, but a brilliant young woman, whose intelligence is so far above that of the average man her age that it is natural for her to turn for mental companionship to an older man.

At first, I thought the attraction between her and my husband was solely a mental attraction bred of their business contacts . . . But events of the past few months force me to the conclusion that it has gone further than that . . . Only recently I found a letter in his pocket, the envelope half torn off, so that I could not help but see the endearing terms with which it was concluded. The words burned into my heart so that I see them before my eyes constantly . . . I cannot sleep without the help of a sedative.

• • • •

I asked my husband casually the other day whether he had heard from X recently. (She has removed to another city since he first met her.) He said, "No." That could mean, to me, that my suspicions are justified, that the affair has gotten to a point where he doesn't want me to know it is continuing. Is this conclusion logical, or has my usually clear vision been misted by suspicion?

Now, what I want to know is this: Shall I continue to ignore the affair, or, if it is brought to my attention, pretend to take it all lightly? Or shall I tell my husband that this has gone too far, and that he will have to end it an once and entirely? If I ignore it, will I be, in effect, encouraging the affair, or, at least, suffering it to continue?

In that case, I may lose my husband to this girl altogether. If I tell him it must stop, he may be so antagonized my my narrow-minded bigotry that he may discard me entirely.

• • • •

I hope you will think well, Miss Haworth, before answering this letter and giving your opinion, because I intend to be guided 100 per cent by your advice. So you see if your advice is wrong, a broken marriage may be upon your head. Please answer soon as the suspense is terrible and I cannot wait long for your advice. DISTRAUGHT.

Wife Holds Advantage.

DEAR DISTRAUGHT: The discovery of a love letter from X in your husband's pocket, together with his false denial of having heard from her, is strong circumstantial evidence that the affair has progressed beyond the platonic stage. Even so, even if he should now believe himself seriously in love with her and she with him, the odds favor your holding him if you keep your head.

Men are creatures of comfortable habit. They are more conventional minded than women. In mature years, those who belong to the substantial citizen class have interlocking business and social reasons as a rule for wishing to preserve at least the appearance of status quo in their private lives, and, what is more to the point, the majority of worthwhile men who have lived in amity, if not in continuous romantic rapture, with a congenial wife over a period of years have so conditioned their existence to her own that life without her would be well-nigh unthinkable to them.

• • • •

My advice to you is to ignore the affair entirely until and unless your husband brings it to your attention. Whatever advantage you hold as his wife is best maintained by turning a blind eye and a deaf ear to his romantic peccadillo, so long as he keeps it a peccadillo by covering it up. Don't listen to gossip, don't probe for damning evidence to brood over, and don't antagonize your husband by creating a situation in which he must explain himself or defend the other woman.

• • • •

You might be helped to regain your poise through reading the chapter in the late Dr. Beran Wolfe's book, "A Woman's Best Years," devoted to a consideration of what a wife should do when she discovers her husband is involved in an extra-marital love affair. An authority on human behavior, particularly as related to problems of love, marriage and sex, Dr. Wolfe there explains why it pays the wife to refuse to concede the existence of such a contretemps. It is his observation that in so doing she stands the best chance of bringing her husband back to her with his love strengthened and his protective loyalty intensified. If she makes war on the situation, she may be weakening her already precarious hold on him.

• • • •

I cannot possibly oblige you to the extent of shouldering full responsibility for the success or failure of your marriage. If your husband and X are both mature, intelligent persons of forceful character who believe they have found in each other their mental, spiritual and physical complement and whose code of ethics permits them to believe they have the right to seize, by cruel force if necessary, an opportunity to make a life together, they may proceed to do just that, in spite of the most subtle resistance on your part. When a marriage fails, the cause may be looked for in the character or conduct of one or the other of the contracting parties. It is hitting far wide of the mark to attribute the wreck to bad advice from others. Something is radically wrong when outside advice is solicited. M. H.

Elizabeth Arden
"A Pageant of Beauty"
On display at the Little Theatre of Frank R. Jelleff, Incorporated, from Tuesday, December 3d, through Saturday, December 7th. This unusual mural, executed for Miss Arden's country home by Clara Fargo Thomas, portrays beautiful women from Cleopatra's time down to the present. Its historical background will interest not only lovers of art, but those high in educational circles.
Madame Medea Ball, direct from Elizabeth Arden's in Paris, will be here all week to assist in showing this mural. She will give special lectures on beauty at 11:30 A. M. and 2:30 P. M. daily.

10 Are Killed In Week-End Auto Traffic

Death Toll in District Is 106 as Injured Man Dies in Hospital.

Eight Dead in Virginia and Maryland Crashes; Berwyn Man Hit.

Week-end auto traffic in the Washington metropolitan area took two lives yesterday, raising the District's 1935 death toll to 106. Eight were killed in Maryland and Virginia, bringing the Sunday toll to 10.

Samuel L. Gellston, 61, of 632 East Capitol street, died in Casualty Hospital of injuries suffered Saturday night. He was the city's 106th fatality of the year.

A hit-run auto brought death to Edward Hanna, 35, of Berwyn, Md. He was found unconscious yesterday along the Baltimore highway near his home. He died a few hours later in Casualty Hospital of a fractured skull.

Gellston's skull also was fractured when he drove his car into a parked truck at New York and Fairview avenues northeast. Murray F. Parnall, Jacksonville, Fla., owner of the truck, was exonerated when Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of accidental death.

Skull injuries were suffered by Albert Borza, 20, 618 I street northwest, and Donald Ross, 21, 1716 Nineteenth street northwest, when their automobile overturned near Chain Bridge in Virginia. They were taken to Georgetown University Hospital.

Albert C. Moxin, 25, 520 Benning road northeast, was arrested on charges of leaving the scene of an accident without notifying police in the fatal injury of Joseph Coleman, 20, 629 W street northwest, Thanksgiving Day when he was struck by a car on Benning road.

The Virginia dead:

William Wood, 23, of Buffalo Ridge, killed in a grade-crossing crash near Roanoke.

Gay Wood, 16, and Cornelia Wood, 14, both of Roanoke, killed in the same accident.

Lucian H. Davis, 56, of New Castle, CCC worker, fatally injured when an auto hit a bridge abutment near Webster.

An unidentified white man, struck and fatally injured near Petersburg.

The Maryland dead:

Paul Bowman, 23, CCC worker, of Chewsville, killed by a hit-and-run auto along the Cavetown pike, 2 miles east of Hagerstown.

Willard Wertz, 24, of Buffalo Mills, Bedford County, killed by another hit-run auto at Stringtown, Pa., 3 miles north of Ellerslie, Md.

William Bowers, 20, of Cowenton, fatally injured in an auto crash near White Marsh.

Hospital Reports Milligan Improved

Marked improvement was reported yesterday in the condition of former Representative Jacob L. Milligan, of Missouri, ill in Georgetown University Hospital.

Dr. Francis R. Hagner said the patient, former assistant Democratic whip of the House, had a "good chance" to recover. The physician was undecided whether an operation would be necessary.

Milligan has been in the hospital for a week. His condition at first was regarded as grave.

Mount Vernon Bible Marks Church Exhibit

Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard, the only person born at Mount Vernon now living, looks at the ancient Mount Vernon Bible —to be part of an exhibit of treasured Bibles at Christ Church, Alexandria, Saturday and Sunday.

Kin of First President Opens Historic Volume at Anniversary.

For Mrs. Eleanor Selden Washington Howard, only person now living who was born at Mount Vernon, home of America's first President, the exhibition of treasured Bibles this week-end in Alexandria, Va., is more than the commemoration of an anniversary.

While Alexandrians and their visitors come to old Christ Church, George Washington's church, to mark the 400th anniversary of the first printing of a Bible in English, this 80-year-old woman, will recall days of long ago, as she fondles a huge, yellowed volume.

This ancient book, more venerable by far than she, was carried from its secure place in an Alexandria bank vault last week to be added to the display. It is the "Washington Bible," which, printed in 1772, was once the most valued volume in the Mount Vernon library and contains the inscription of George Washington.

Mrs. Howard made a pilgrimage to Christ's Church the day the yellowed Book was placed in the church, and standing by the chancel rail at which she was baptized nearly eight decades ago, officially opened the Bible for the show. It will be open through next Saturday and Sunday, the days the exhibit will be conducted from 2 until 5 p. m.

The revered Book, which once played so important a part in the life of Mount Vernon, brought back memories of long, long ago for Mrs. Howard, whose father, John Augustin Washington 3d, sold Mount Vernon in 1856. Mrs. Howard was 4 years old then.

She recalled that the historic estate was sold because of "circumstances."

"Our family was near starvation," the little white-haired woman said. "We were eaten out of house and home by notables who invariably came to Mount Vernon for hospitality or out of curiosity. My parents grieved over our lack of privacy. Why, I've heard them say we hardly had a meal without visitors coming to the door or to the windows to peer in."

Inebrity Here Is on Increase, Dry Chief Says

Jarvis Asserts Distillery Seeks Patrons Among School Girls.

Drunken driving and inebriety have "increased alarmingly" in the District since prohibition ended, T. B. Jarvis, dry leader, told the Brightwood Methodist Episcopal Church congregation last night.

The speech by the former secretary of the Citizens Service Association was the first of a series of talks by those who hope to have Congress ban the sale of liquor here.

"Police records here and in every city in the country," Jarvis said, "show a very great increase in every class of crime.

"One of the excuses the wets put forth to get rid of prohibition was that bootlegging would cease and crime would be greatly reduced. Since repeal there has been more bootlegging than there ever was during prohibition."

"Distillery Lures Girls."

He reported all but 11 of some 100 institutions for the cure of alcoholics ceased operating because of the eighteenth amendment.

"Now," he added, "they are again running at full blast all over the country and we are soon to have one here for the National Capital if our Commissioners get their way.

"A movement is now on foot to buy a farm where the drunkards may be kept until they sober up. One never heard of such a movement during prohibition."

A distillery, the speaker asserted, has been circularizing its products among girl students in District schools.

"1,700 Saloons Here."

"Right now," Jarvis said, "we are in a much worse condition in every way than at any period before prohibition. The old saloon with all its evils was never as attractive or as harmful as the present so-called liquor store.

"In the District of Columbia before the Sheppard law was enacted there were some 300 saloons. Now there are over 1,700 saloons in the District of Columbia.

"Of course, the Liquor Control Board does not call them saloons, but the same or worse liquor is sold in all of them with the added attraction of calling them 'respectable places for young people and for ladies.'"

Group to Give Report Today On Boundary

Committee Ends Studies on Old Dispute of D. C., Virginia.

Brough Says Provisions Are Not Retroactive; Findings Unknown.

The more - than - century - old boundary dispute between the District and Virginia has been officially—but not finally—settled.

The settlement is expected to be made known today with publication of the report of the commission named two years ago to find an answer to the argument.

The official life of the Virginia-District of Columbia Boundary Commission expired yesterday and, according to its chairman, Charles H. Brough, its findings are complete. The setlement reached, embodied in a report expected to be released from the printers today, requires the approval of Congress and the Virginia General Assembly to become final.

Brough, a former Governor of Arkansas, declined to reveal the Commission's findings. He said, however, that its provisions "will not be retroactive."

It was probable, however, that the Commission adopted an agreement announced last September on that phase of the dispute affecting the boundary line between Alexandria and the District. The agreement, made subject to ratification by the Commission, set aside the old boundary of 1791 at the high watermark and established a new boundary at the present high watermark.

Filed by Iverson.

Disputed land filled in since 1791 would become, under the terms of this agreement, the property of its present private claimants or of the City of Alexandria. It was filed with the commission by Judge G. A. Iverson, special assistant to the Attorney General, and was drawn up by him and Carl Budwesky, Alexandria city counsel.

The question which the commission's report will answer is whether the Virginia-District boundary line is at the high or low watermark on the Potomac River. The controversy began long before the District came into existence and originally was between Virginia and Maryland.

A royal grant in 1632 gave to Lord Baltimore all of Maryland to the furthermost shore of the Potomac. Six years later another grant was made to Lord Culpeper including within the boundary of Virginia all of the Potomac River.

Maryland and Virginia settled their dispute in 1785 by establishing the low watermark on the Virginia shore as the Maryland boundary. Subsequently, Maryland made its grant of land to the Federal Government for the creation of the District.

Advanced Contentions.

In its arguments before the commission, the District contended that the Lord Baltimore grant established its boundary at the high watermark on the Virginia shore of the river. Virginia asked that the low watermark be made official on a "point to point" basis, leaving to Virginia all shore indentations.

In making its report, the commission will offer a solution not only for the disputed boundary, but also to questions of taxation, police jurisdiction, property ownership and highway and park development. The report will be sent to Gov. Peery, Vice President Garner and Speaker of the House Byrns.

Twenty months were spent hearing testimony, gathering evidence and considering the decision to be embodied in a report of approximately 50 pages. The investigation cost about $24,000.

Two extensions of the commission's life by Congress and the Virginia Assembly were necessary to complete the task. The boundary commission of 1877, however, worked five years and made two trips to the London Museum for background material, Brough pointed out.

Nine Flee to Street as Fire Sweeps Two Homes and Threatens Third

Quinn Praises Elks' Tolerance In Rite for Dead

Ford and Kenelly Among Those Paid Tribute at Ceremony.

Elks were commended for religious tolerance last night by Henry I. Quinn at services in memory of members who have died in the past year.

The speaker, himself an Elk and a member of the Board of Education, praised the departed members on their services to the fraternal order and to their country.

A cross formed of white electrical bulbs was symbolical of members who died in past years. A purple light was turned on each time the name of one of the 28 who died this year was called. The purple bulbs formed a cross within a cross.

Among those honored were Cornelius Ford, former public printer, and John J. Kenelly, former newspaper man.

Miss Vera Neely Ross, contralto, sang. She was accompanied by Miss Charlotte Klein. Other music was offered by a group from the Elks Boys Band, with Capt. John S. M. Zimmermann, conductor of the Soldiers' Home Band, at the organ.

James J. Murray, exalted ruler, presided. Four hundred persons attended.

The service was held at the Washington Elks Club.

Army Fliers Elude Death in Smash-up

Two Army fliers, Sergt. J. E. Gazek and Cadet Pilot P. E. Armspaugh, narrowly escaped death yesterday, according to the Associated Press, when the plane in which they were flying from Cleveland to Bolling Field crashed into a barn and was demolished near Uniontown, Pa.

Ice on the wings of their Douglas pursuit ship forced them to try for a landing in dense fog. They struck a plowed field, bounded into the air again, skimmed across a highway and into the barn.

Passerby Gives Warning and Helps Rescue Woman From Blazing House; Flames Were Started by Overheated Kitchen Stove.

Nine persons, most of them women and children, were driven to the street last night by a fire that burned through two homes and threatened a third in the 800 block of Fourth street northeast.

The fire started from an overheated stove in the kitchen of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Unrue at 816 Fourth street. It blazed up through the ceiling to the roof and by the time firemen were called flames were sweeping into the second floor of the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Murnane at 818 Fourth street, adjoining the Unrue house. The home of Miss Annie Costello at 820 Fourth street filled with smoke.

The Unrues were away, but Mr. and Mrs. Murnane and their daughter, Dorothy, 9, were eating supper in the Murnane kitchen. Andrew J. Gleeson, an employe of the Government Printing Office, saw the fire as he was walking to his home at 827 Fourth street.

Gleeson ran to the rear of the Murnane home and shouted to Mrs. Murnane that their home was on fire. Mrs. Murnane replied that she didn't think it was, but a few seconds later was so overcome by the discovery of fire in a second story bedroom that she had to be assisted from the house by Gleeson.

At 820 Fourth street, Miss Costello was entertaining her nieces and nephews, the children of Edward Folliard, 1419 Eighteenth place southeast, a printer, and two of the Gleeson grandchildren. They were Downey Folliard, 2; Agnes, 4, and Edward, jr., 5, and Bernard Gleeson, 6, and Kathryn Frances, 9.

Edward jumped from a first floor window when he heard of the fire. The other children were led from the house by Miss Costello and Miss Margaret McDonough, 1003 Kearney street northeast, another of Miss Costello's visitors.

Several hundred residents of the neighborhood watched the blaze. Police diverted traffic on Eleventh street for nearly an hour.

Acting Fire Chief J. L. Werheim estimated the loss at $2,000.

Bandits Rob Four, Attack Fifth Person

2 Others Report Pockets Picked in Week-End of Robberies.

Shops and Homes Looted at a Loss of $300, Police Told.

Four men were attacked and robbed, another beaten when he refused to surrender his money, and two others reported their pockets picked in a series of holdups over the week-end.

Roland Rathbun, 1717 G street northwest, was assaulted and robbed of $5 in cash and $75 worth of clothing by three men he had taken to his room.

Leo Carr, 1743 A street southeast, told police he was held up by an armed colored man while he was walking at Sixteenth and A streets southeast. The Negro took his shoes, overcoat, a wrist watch and $6 in bills, he said.

Fare Robs Taxi Driver.

Charlie Jackson, colored, 1254-A Carrollsburg place southwest, a taxi driver, reported he picked up a fare and in the 1000 block Vermont avenue northwest, was robbed of $9.50. Jackson said the bandit had a blue steel revolver.

Two colored men robbed Lee C. Bates, 1523 Swann street northwest, a Negro cab driver, of his automobile and $6 when he refused to drive them into an alley in the 1000 block R street northwest.

Jeter O. Coates, 54, 3104 Mount Pleasant street northwest, was beaten on the head by two colored men he had picked up in his car at Seventh street and Florida avenue northwest. Coates told police the men ordered him to stop at Third street and Virginia avenue southwest, and he speeded up instead. They hit him with a blunt instrument, he declared. He was treated at Providence Hospital for minor head cuts.

Floyd H. Dunn, 35, 1716 D street northeast, told police $27 was taken from his pockets while he was walking near Eleventh and P streets northwest.

Party Guest Loses $43.

Vaughn McQueen, 1108 M street northwest, said $43 was taken from him while he was attending a party in the basement of the house where he rooms.

Silverware and household articles, valued at $163, were stolen from his home at 4211 Ellicott street northwest, William H. Sweeney reported to police. The thief entered through a cellar window and ransacked the house, he said.

George A. Ruth, 1705 Third street northwest, said a $4 automobile battery was taken from his shop. Automobile accessories worth $42.69 were reported stolen from a filling station in the 300 block New York avenue northwest, by Nona Allen, 1301 Fifteenth street northwest.

John W. Clark, manager of a grocery store in the 1200 block Thirteenth street northwest, told police 84 cartons of cigarettes, valued at $80, were taken from his store by a burglar who cut through iron bars on a back door.

Reinhardt Sets up Penthouse Green Room for First World Premiere in America

Begins Work at Night Keeps Up Until Daylight

"Eternal Road" His Next; Two Statuettes Urged; Amusement Chatter.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Salzburg has moved to New York.

For the first time, the creative dramatic activity which Max Reinhardt has been carrying on along a world front for the past half century, now revolves in New York around his penthouse apartment on East Fifty-second street, where the first world premiere of a Reinhardt production ever to be staged in this country is being prepared.

In this environment, peculiarly characteristic of Manhattan, the newest and latest of his far-flung green rooms—and they have been set up in Berlin, London, Paris, Vienna, Salzburg and practically every other capital of Europe—is the busy scene of intensive planning in preparation for a January opening of Franz Werfel's stage spectacle, "The Eternal Road."

Many times in the course of his career Max Reinhardt has presented productions in places where theatrical facilities were never even dreamed of prior to his arrival on the scene. He never has insisted upon formal surroundings for his planning of a production. With his retinue in attendance, he always has found a "theater" wherever he has been called upon to produce.

Utilizes Any Environment.

Exposition halls, intended for automobile shows and the like, have been turned into cathedrals for "The Miracle." Cathedrals and the domplatz before them have become settings for this "Everyman" and Calderon's "The Great World Theater."

Hillsides, open-air stadia and formal gardens all have been pressed into service, from time to time, to accomodate Titania, Oberon and the fairyland scenes of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which he so recently and so successfully translated into terms of celluloid fantasy.

Reinhardt, carrying his green room with him, has been equal to every emergency.

The New York, penthouse green room, the first the Herr Docktor has established in this country, is his home as well as his workshop.

His household staff and impedimenta, consisting of chief stage assistants, technical advisers, baggage, butler, bottles, cook, pantryman and dog, came to America from Salzburg with him.

In addition, Reinhardt, whose long practice it has been to insist upon the presence of dramatist—Master Shakespeare excepted—composer and scenic designer, receives daily calls from Franz Werfel, Kurt Weill and Norman Bel Geddes.

Werfel Recent Arrival.

Franz Werfel, Austrian poet, novelist and dramatist, who is widely known in this country for his novel, "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," recently came to America for the first time to comply with Reinhardt's insistence that he be on hand for conferences.

The composer, Kurt Keill, known for his "Three Penny Opera," has been represented on the programs of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Bruno Walter. He spends busy mornings in his hotel, overlooking Central Park, working on the score.

The set that Norman Bel Geddes has designed for "The Eternal Road" is the largest that ever will have been designed to go into a legitimate theater. It is Geddes' most pretentious undertaking since his last previous association with Reinhardt in the production of "The Miracle" in 1924.

All this activity, which Reinhardt insists be close at hand, is not enough to disrupt his daily routine.

His day's work for the theater begins at 10 each night and continues until dawn. The European retinue with him knows it is "verboten" to call him before sundown. Gradually, his American associates are becoming accustomed to the nocturnal habits of the Reinhardt menage.

It is interesting to note that in addition to being the first world premiere that Reinhardt will have staged in this country, "The Eternal Road" also will be his first essay at a world debut in the English tongue.

They are harking back to the old days of "presentations" and "atmospheric prologues" in the motion picture theaters at the Warner Brothers Earle this week. The temptation probably was too strong to resist, for there is a musical background to all of the main title and credit footage of "So Red the Rose" that fairly cry for some such effective utilization. So they have costumed Bert Granoff, popular house tenor, set him at a period harpsichord and appointed him the task of making his own renditions of "So Red the Rose," "Carry Me Back to Ol' Virginny" and "Swanee River" into a vocal prelude that will merge perfectly with the introductory chorals heard from the screen. The innovation—which really is nothing but a revival of a former popular device of the early days of the silent screen—has been greeted by applause at every performance since Friday's opening. And why not?

Two Awards Solicited.

They seem to be taking this business seriously of two awards by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in connection with Columbia's picturization of Dostoievski's "Crime and Punishment," to be given a distinguished F street premiere in the Metropolitan Theater on Thursday night of this week at 8:30 o'clock.

I mean to say that Capital theatergoers will be asked to lend their names to a petition urging the academy to give recognition to both Edward Arnold and Peter Lorre for the reputedly outstanding performances they contribute to what has been described by many astute writers who already have been privileged to view it, as one of the greatest works to come out of Hollywood in this generation.

It is the custom of the academy each year to award golden statuettes for the best performance by an actress, the best performance by an actor, the best production, direction, cinematography, sound recording, etc., etc.

It is the purpose to attempt to break down this insistence on a single masculine award in the instant case. Mr. Arnold and Herr Lorre both are said to be surpassing fine in their respective roles of the police inspector and Raskolnikov, the student of crime enlisted to help solve the mystery of a murder which he himself committed.

Sign That Book!

This assault upon the academy's habitual practice will be made through the instrumentality of a large volume of blank pages to be placed in the lobby of the Metropolitan.

Patrons of the theater who deem both Mr. Arnold and Herr Lorre entitled to a golden statuette, symbolic of the excellence of their work, will be asked to sign the book—just as birthday felicitations once were conveyed to the late Marie Dressler by similar means employed in another lobby—which will be submitted to the academy for the consideration of its judges.

The drama desks will preview this widely acclaimed subject tomorrow afternoon, at an hour still secret, in the private projection room of the Warners in the Earle Theater Building.

On Thursday night a considerable list of distinguished guests will view the picture upon its first public revelation on a local screen.

That platinum tornado of what Mr. Whitney is in the habit of referring to as "wim, wiggle and witality," Miss Hinda Wausau, currently demonstrating her dynamic dissonances and torso-tossing at the Gayety Theater, that temple of pulchitrude presided over by the Chesterfieldian Col. James Jeremiah Lake, it may be worth recalling, holds the money record of the Ninth street house.

A good many seasons ago it is now since Hinda breezed into town, as one of the first to "display artistes" developed by the newer concepts of "burlesk," and packed the Gayety to absolute standing-room capacity for 14 straight performances matinee and night for a full seven-day week. In recognition of that feat, she has been brought back innumerable times since.

This visit will extend over the present week and through five days of next, when Miss Wausau will absent herself to open a promising engagement in the near, or middle, West. So now you know.

An Horatio Alger Plot.

Returning to the stage at Loew's Fox Theater, where his professional career had its inception, on next Friday will come a young man whose experience in "show business" bears a considerable tinge of Horatio Alger.

That would be Bill Brady, a young singer, who, a year and a half ago, was a student at George Washington University and took it into his head to appear on the Fox's anniversary bill. He had an excellent voice and an ingratiating personality.

Quitting the halls of learning Mr. Brady journeyed to New York. About seven weeks ago he made his debut at Leon and Eddie's, one of Gotham's warmest night spots, at what is known as a nominal salary. Opening night he scored such a hit that Twentieth Century-Fox offered him a contract. On the same night our old friend, Jim Carroll, Earl's brother, offered him a contract to appear in "Sketch Book." Another offer was for a new Cochran musical production in London.

Going Up.

Three days later Abe Lyman, bandman, offered him a contract at $250 a week. Then the Paradise management raised the ante to $350.

Before completing the new contract Bill was offered a part in the new "Scandals" at $500. That didn't quite click, so he found himself back in New York, where Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed him to one of those seven-year-with-options contracts that will lead him into his seventh year at about $3,500 per week.

His movie contract permits one broadcast a week. So the Shell program has grabbed him for a coast-to-coast hookup.

On next week's stage bill at the Fox, Bill Brady, singing in his best voice, will be co-headlined with Ed Sullivan, The Post's "Broadway" columnist.

Looks like a nice bill.

For the first time in several seasons in Washington, Mrs. Benny Davis, wife of the producer of the "Star Dust Revue of 1935," currently wowing the customers at the Earle this week, made a brief appearance with her husband at the last performance last Friday night. An old trouper herself, in a figurative sense, you understand, Mrs. Davis still can sing a very lilting roundelay and step off a dance measure or two in the most approved, or first-row, manner. There wasn't a youngster on the bill—and Benny's new show is packed with 'em—who topped the Missus in applause.

Dots and Dashes.

Speaking of Benny Davis, Helen Compton, conducting her Bryn Mawr Orchestra on the Fox stage this week, is singing his song hit, "Chasing Shadows," as her vocal solo number . . . So is he, snatches of it, in his medley of personal compositions, at the Earle . . . The lad has written them by the bale! Remember "Make Believe?" . . . That was the theme song of 1921 . . . A practically frantic note on my desk states that tickets now are on sale for the Studio of Theater Arts' production of "Squaring the Circle," December 10 and 11 . . . At Wardman Park, that would be . . . Tickets at the Willard, or direct from the studio . . . The cast of "Journey's End" to be given in the auditorium of the University of Maryland December 4, 5 and 6, includes Fred Haskin, jr., Joel Hutton, Bill Johnson, Sam Leishner, Theodore Erbe, Jerome Sachs, Baird Seidel, Paul Wise, Jerry Fox and William Groff . . . All members of the U. of Md. Footlight Club . . . December 17 and 18 are the dates for the Drama Guild's second production of the season . . . "Tobias and the Angel," first production of James Bridie's London hit of a few seasons ago . . . Also at Wardman Park . . . Pageantry and dances supervised by Lisa Gardiner, the Capital's prima ballerina . . . Special newsreel shots of the Army-Navy game, played in Philadelphia Saturday, began yesterday at the Earle and Metropolitan theaters . . . "The Merry Wives of Windsor," acted by the Shakespeare Society of Washington, tonight in St. Poul's Auditorium, 1421 V street . . . Cast includes many of Washington's foremost amateurs . . . Alice Louise Hunter and four of her smallest dance pupils appear as the fairies and goblins in the hilarious fifth act . . . So along comes Jack Alicoate's annual appeal for the selection of the "Ten Best Pictures of the Year" . . . So soon? . . . We just got through doing that a minute ago . . . Or was it a year? . . . Katherine Cornell will act the role of Juliet in Shakespeare's classic tragedy for the 200th time in America, in the Grand Opera House, Chicago, Thursday night of this week, December 5

Play Vivid Roles in Thrilling Film

When Columbia's widely heralded picturization of Dostoievski's story of "Crime and Punishment" is presented for the first time on a Washington screen at a special Thursday evening showing in the Metropolitan Theater this week, two of the principal roles will be played by the radiant Miss Marian Marsh and the ominous Mr. Peter Lorre, both characteristically photographed above. The third of the cast's stellar triumvirate is Edward Arnold, who recently scored as "Diamond Jim," the filmed story of the life of the late James Buchanan Brady.

Newman Talks On 'Ethiopia' Before Crowd

Second Lecture of Season Wins Plaudits of Large Audience at National.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"ETHIOPIA." Second of a series of three Traveltalks by E. M. Newman in the National Theater on Sunday afternoon at 3. Illustrated with motion pictures and still photographic studies in both black and white and natural color. Under the direction of Charles Mercer, Chicago.

Professing and consistently maintaining a rigid nonpartisanship with regard to the international complications threatened by Italy's adventure in eastern Africa, E. M. Newman yesterday afternoon in the National Theater delivered a Travel-talk on the absorbing topic of "Ethiopia" which, in its factual aspects, minute exploration of a little-known country and illuminatng photography, took immediate rank as one of the most interesting, informative and timely the Capital ever has had the privilege to enjoy.

Prefacing the illustrated portion of his lecture with a brief declaration of purpose and discussion of certain disputed pronunciations of Ethiopian names—Mr. Newman prefers to accent the second syllable of the second word in the name of the capital of the country, Addis Ababa, eschewing the substitution of "w's" for the "b's," and also favors a second-syllable emphasis of Djibouti, in French Somaliland—the speaker launched at once into a preliminary survey of the complete preparedness of Il Duce's government for the campaign it has undertaken.

With amazingly eloquent scenes of official and civilian support of the Mussolini policies, a tour was made of the recently restored Via Impero in Rome, the Sicilian training grounds of African troops, to be returned to Ethiopia to battle; the great British naval base at Malta and the geographical barricades that have been thrown around the Lion of Judah by the leading powers of Europe.

Discounts Current Reports.

It was pointed out that all reports of the lifting of arms embargoes for the Ethiopians must be discounted, because no white nation on earth dares arm the black tribesmen of Africa, by whom they are outnumbered 500 to 1, with modern instruments of destruction.

Progressing through Djibouti and French Somaliland, across the deserts to the uplands of Ethiopia and the capital, Addis Ababa, constant stress was laid upon the primitive mentalities and mode of living of a native population steeped in the superstitions, sorceries and barbaric relics of 7,000 years of isolated "civilization."

Constant contrast was drawn between the antiquated and practically worthless equipment of the Ethiopian armies—described as unorganized, untrained and uncontrolled rabbles—and the ultra-modern ordnance, planes and subsistence equipment of an Italian force perfected to the last degree for precisely the task in hand.

Apart from the dominant note of war and the threatened subjugation of an ancient race that always has been free, the talk dealt at some length with the ages-old social, religious, legal and feudal laws of the land; the appalling crudity of life in a capital city without sidewalks, running water, sewage system or any other modern improvement accepted as a commonplace of ordinary living in other parts of the world.

As a sidelight upon the complex questions raised by the Italian invasion, Mr. Newman pointed out briefly the strategic problems raised by control of Lake Tsana, source of the Blue Nile, and the possible effects upon the future of the British Sudan and the interior development of Ethiopia's natural resources which that control might have.

Empress Is Real Ruler.

An important commentary upon the strength of the Ethiopian throne was made in the observation that Haile Selassie never has been able to unite his people, while the Empress, daughter of King Menelik II, most revered ruler in the history of his country, enjoys the love and respect of every paramount and petty chieftain in the land as well as of all their followers. The Empress, in other words, is the power; "The Lion of Judah," merely the figurehead.

Although next Sunday afternoon's talk on "The South Seas" is scheduled to end Mr. Newman's unusually brief season in Washington, yesterday's "Ethiopia" is so comprehensive, so brilliantly expository and so vital that its repetition at a later date would be completely justified from the viewpoints of both public and boxoffice.

Postlude . . . . By Ray C. B. Brown

National Symphony Orchestra, Hans Kindler, conductor; Elizabeth Travis, piano soloist. Constitution Hall, Sunday afternoon. Program: Suite in B minor for flute and strings (Bach), Pianoforte concerto in A major (Liszt), "La Procession Nocturne" (Rabaud), Praeludium (Jaernefelt), "Sailors' Dance" from "The Red Poppy" ballet (Gliere).

Elizabeth Travis, the engaging young pianist from Boston, who must be accustomed to debuts by this time, received the ovation which followed her first appearance in Washington with a deprecating shyness that contradicted her assurance at the keyboard. As she bowed and smiled at her five recalls, there was in her air something of embarrassed wonder at the vehemence of the applause—a hint of timid uncertainty that the enthusiasm really was directed at herself. Artistic modesty of this kind is an additional charm in a musician in whom youth and capability combine.

An admirable technical facility emerged with brilliance from her performance of the concreto which Liszt designed as an Exhibit A of virtuosity. Not only did she deal dextrously with difficulties of finger technique, and meet the demands of speed and dynamic impetuousness with a gallant elan, but she also displayed a fine command of tone color. In her reading, too, there was an imaginative quality which one would like to hear applied to a composition more worthy of her poetic mettle.

What one heard on this occasion was a dashing romanticism quite in keeping with the outward semblance of the concerto. There was an abundance of vitality and exciting urgency in her playing, an ebullition of sparkling vivacity that had a stimulating effect upon her auditors. With a pleasing personality, a piquant style, and evidences of interpretative power only partly disclosed in a scintillant showpiece, Miss Travis should go far.

In this A major concerto, Liszt is seen at his musical nadir. It is a deliberately manufactured tour de force to amaze the public, highly artificial in its feats of prestidigitation, and glib in its facile phrasings. It flashes with the jewels of technical tricks, but these jewels are stitched on a garment of fustian. It exhibits all the worst phases of a conscious romanticism: externality, theatrical posturings, and histrionic rodomontade, and it contains no trace of Liszt's real greatness as a musician nor of the genuine nobility of which he was capable in his serious artistic creation.

In the more obvious triumph of Miss Travis, one should not overlook the efficient artistry of Harold Bennett, who played the solo flute in the Bach suite. Faced with a partition full of exacting roulades and long passages on a breath, he blew a clear and dulcet tone which was distinct in the loudest tutti, and his phrasings had grace and accentual accuracy.

The four orchestral suites which Bach composed at Coethen make one wonder what our heritage from him would have been had he continued to write courtly music for the entertainment of aristocrats, and what might have taken the place of the glorious masterpieces which he created in Leipzig. Though he is said to have been happy in the service of Prince Leopold, one cannot believe that he would have remained indefinitely content with turning out dances, and even had he developed into a symphonist, one sumises that he would never have found satisfaction therein for his profoundly religious nature.

Henri Rabaud was only 25 when he wrote "La Procession Nocturne," which reveals mastery of supple instrumentation and a glowing poetic sensibility. The plan is simple and the workmanship delicate, but the striking element in the warmly colored music is its deft characterization. In this comparatively brief episode of the legend, the figure of Faust has more reality than in Gounod's whole opera.

Jaernefelt's playful prelude is justly a popular concert number, for its geniality is sincere. It is a loving study in the antique form, every detail of which is worked out in careful precision, yet the aspect which abides in memory is not its chiselled perfection, but its melodic charm.

The "Sailors' Dance," from Gliere's ballet, is hard, metallic music hammered out in a smithy. It stimulates one's rhythmic responses, but does nothing else, for all its clever manipulation of a lively theme.

When recalled at the close of the program, Dr. Kindler addressed the audience, expressing his appreciation of the requests sent in for extra numbers, and regretting his inability to comply with them all. Thereafter he conducted the most familiar of the three nocturnes, surcharged with sentiment, which Iiszt titled "Dreams of Love."

Gayety

"THE BIG REVUE." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 29 scenes, with Hinda Wausau, Lillian Dixon, Irving Voglee, Harry Arnie, Mary Weldon, Kirk Brown, Al Golden, Art Nealy and the Lester Montgomery Girls. Book by Irving Selig. Dances routined by Lester Montgomery. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Bob Hurleigh.

Hinda Wausau is the answer to a burlesque theater manager's prayer. The featured attraction at the Ninth street temple of undulant blondes and cavorting comedians is, indeed, such a personality as to bring callouses to the fingers of any burlesque ticket-taker.

Her costumes are never magnificient, her voice is no better than that possessed by the average display artiste, and her dances will never provoke rave notices. Yet Hinda Wausau is the only star who comes to the Gayety to bring fear to the heart of Jimmy Lake—fear that his overenthusiastic patrons might, in a moment of spontaneous acclamation, burst their arteries.

Hinda Wausau is burlesque incarnate.

Comics Know How.

Irving Selig, Harry Arnie and "Coo-Coo" Morrisey are comics who know how to read their lines, even if these lines are at times seemingly without much humor. The deft work of Al Golden and Kirk Brown in playing straight to their funnymen is the real reason why roars of laughter run through the theater on divers and sundry occasions.

Those on the distaff side who do their share of charming are Lillian Dixon, tall and stately; Dolores LeLand, defiant dancer; Mary Weldon, vivid and vivacious, and Irma Voglee, petite and pleasing.

Art Nealy is the tenor, and one of the circuit's best, too.

The Montgomery-trained chorus girls are always top-notch precision dancers.

2 Groups to Meet On Child Guidance

Mrs. J. A. Frick to Preside at Two-Day Session.

The Child Guidance conference and mid-winter Girl Scout conference, a joint gathering, will open in the Washington Hotel tomorrow for a two-day session.

Mrs. John A. Frick, of Allentown, Pa., chairman of the Girl Scout regional committee for Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia, will preside. Dr. Leo Kanner, associate professor of psychiatry at Johns Hopkins Hospital, will be the discussion chairman.

Child guidance, mental hygiene and recreation will be discussed at a series of group meetings tomorrow. These will be in charge of Mrs. Sadie Ginsberg, director of the Baltimore Chapter, Child Study Association of America; Dr. H. W. Newell, clinical director of the Maryland Mental Hygiene Society; Dr. Harry F. Latshaw, of the Baltimore Department of Education, and Dr. Paul Ewerhardt, director of the Child Guidance Clinic in this city.

Princeton Might Be Persuaded to Play in Bowl, Is Report

Season Most Prosperous Since '29

Most Spectacular, in Many Respects, Than Any Since War.

Victories of Princeton, Methodists and Army Climax Campaign.

By Alan Gould

Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Wrapped up and tucked under a fresh blanket of snow today, except for the aftermath of arguments and post-season playoffs slated for Pasadena and New Orleans, the 1935 college football season has contributed a memorable chapter to the history of the great American sport.

By far the most prosperous since the 1929 peak and in many respects the most spectacular from a competitive standpoint since the war, the gridiron campaign was brought to a smashing climax in the East and South yesterday.

Amid the tumult and the shouting of some of the season's biggest crowds, Southern Methodist toppled its Southwest rival, Texas Christian, from the unbeaten ranks, in a battle of Titans; Army blasted out a startling victory over the Navy, and Princeton completed its all-conquering season with a touchdown parade in the Yale bowl.

Before 40,000 dazzled onlookers at Fort Worth, Texas Christian was stopped after scoring ten consecutive victories. "Slinging Sam" Baugh tossed close to 50 passes for the favored Christians. Southern Methodist fired only a handful, but one of them enabled Bobby Wilson to score, breaking the last period deadlock and carrying the famous "Pony Express" to a 20-14 triumph.

Southern Methodist's eleventh successive victory pointed the team's ambitions toward the Rose Bowl, with only Texas A. and M. to bar the immediate goal of an unbeaten season, next Saturday, and a clear hold on the Southwest Conference championship.

Army had to fight for its life against Navy's savage counter-attack after rolling up 28 points in the first 20 minutes of the annual service battle at Philadelphia, but the Cadets emerged, bruised and battered, with a 28-6 verdict that was the biggest in 32 years.

However, it was obvious Army was not as superior as the lopsided score indicated. An 80-yard dash for a touchdown in the first few minutes started the Cadets on a rare scoring spree to which the elusive Whitey Grove contributed 16 points, aided by his versatile backfield mate, Monk Meyer.

Navy came back in the second half with a terrific onslaught, but wasted all except one scoring

Detroit Lions Win, 28 to 0; Near Title

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 1.—The Detroit Lions made a strong bid for a shot at the National Professional Football League championship here today, clawing the Brooklyn Dodgers into submission, 28-0, before 12,000 fans who shivered through below-freezing weather.

The victory gave Detroit a record of seven wins, three losses and two ties for the regular season and virtually clinched the Western Division title and the right for a championship game with the New York Giants, almost certin winners of the league's Eastern section. The Cardinals can tie Detroit next Sunday, however, with a win over the Bears.

Detroit scored in the last three periods, going into high gear in the final quarter for 16 points. Brooklyn never seriously threatened and had to continually fight from deep in its own territory.

Glen Presnel, high scorer for the day, booted a 28-yard field goal in the second period. In the third, Ralph Kercheval, passing frantically from deep in his end zone after a bad pass, hit the goal post and the bound-back of the ball gave Detroit a safety. A crushing straight football attack for 36 yards ended with Dutch Clark scoring from the 1-foot line just before the period ended.

Sectional Football Situation in Brief

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 1.—Here's the sectional college football situation in brief with the season completed on all except a few scattered fronts.

East — Princeton, with nine straight victories, only unbeaten and untied major team. Holy Cross undefeated but tied once. Army regains service championship from Navy.

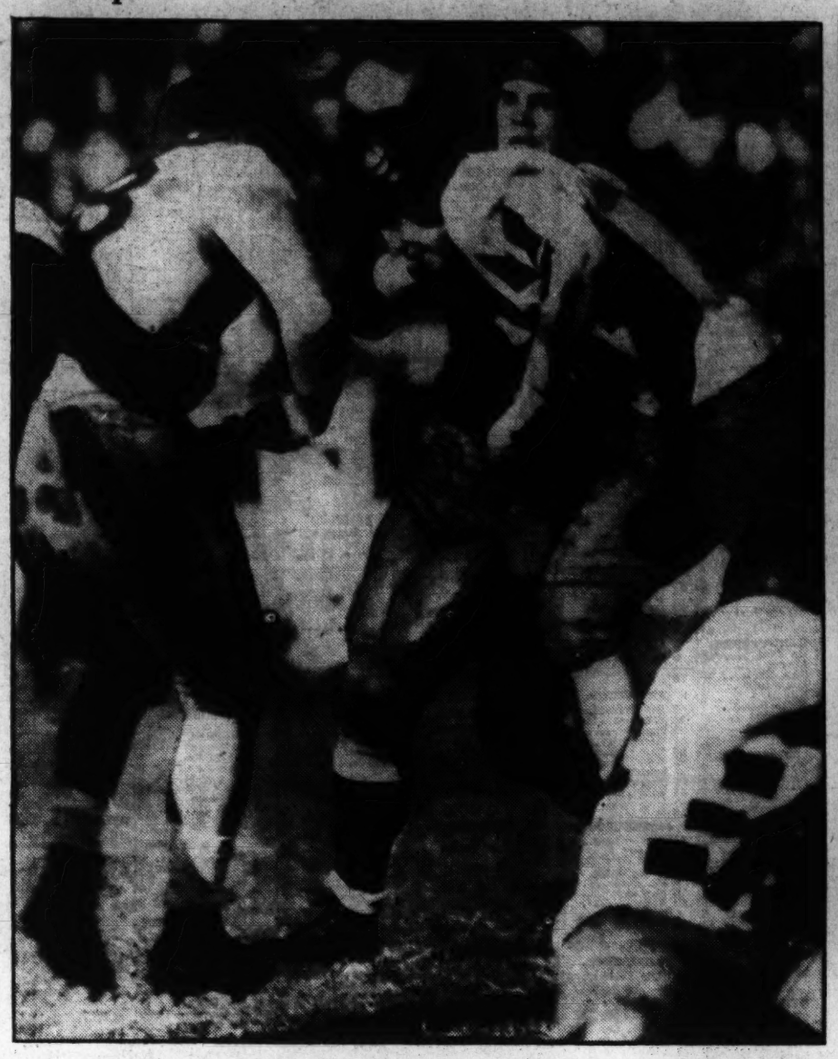
Middle West — Minnesota, unbeaten and untied. Shares Big Ten title with Ohio State. Nebraska, winner in Big Six.

South—Louisiana State at top in Southeastern Conference and Duke the champion of Southern Conference.

Southwest — Southern Methodist, unbeaten and untied in 11 games. Holds undisputed lead in Southwest Conference, with one more contest to play. Texas Christian beaten by S. M. U. after ten straight victories.

Far West—Triple tie among Stanford, California and U. C. L. A., for Pacific Coast Conference title. Colorado and Utah State at top in Rocky Mountain Conference.

Oops! A Fumble at a Crooshial Moment



Wurra! Wurra! A Hollingbery Headache

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Trouble on the gridiron in two episodes. Chapter I (left)—Ed Goddard (8), star Washington State quarterback, fumbles as he is crashed behind the line of scrimmage by Timm (63) in Saturday's Washington State-St. Mary's game in San Francisco. Chapter II (right)—Look at the effect it has on Coach Babe Hollingbery of the Cougars! Look at the effect it had on Goddard's teammates! A happy ending was reached, however, when Washington State finally tied the Gaels, 7 to 7.

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

THE brand of baseball that the teams of Mr. C. C. Griffith have provided Washington folks for the last two years is not calculated to inspire a profound vote of thanks among the local sports-going public, yet to him alone the city is indebted for its rescue from almost complete oblivion as a big-time sports center.

POVICH.

For, without Mr. Griffith's ball team operating in the American League, Washington would be a minor league sports town as such things are rated. Its fights smack of the gaslight circuit, its football games, for the most part, command no more national attention than another birth in China, it hasn't been the scene of a horse race since 1908, its golf and tennis tournaments are strictly local-interest affairs, it's a joke as a track and field town and it doesn't even boast a municipal stadium where a big-league sports crowd could be accommodated even if the city were fortunate enough to schedule that kind of an event.

Ice hockey, the fastest game played by humans, and professional football, the supreme thrill of the gridiron, are being denied Washington fans for the lack of a promoter with the necessary wherewithal and willingness to risk it. Washington, ripe for both sports, with 108,000 persons drawing upon the Government pay roll twice a month, is a natural for any enterprising sportsman, but thus far nobody has been killed in the rush to be the first in the field.

Verily, it has been Mr. Griffith's ball club that, alone, has maintained for Washington a place in the sports sun. Three pennant victories and three World Series staged here have been the city's lone claims to national interest. Subtract the presence of the Nats from the local sports calendar and you have a comparatively tank-town sports town.

TO GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY, all credit. It has brought to Washington a group of outstanding football teams, whose presence here has marked a new high in caliber of opposition. Through the efforts of G. W., Washington fans have been enabled to see in action such famed elevens as Alabama, Tennessee, Auburn, Rice and Tulsa, and G. W. has reaped the profits of soaring gate receipts, but the success of its plans is not yet complete.

While G. W. has been outstripping Georgetown, Maryland and Catholic U. in the caliber of the foes it has been able to schedule and the attractiveness of the games it has been able to offer, it has fallen down sadly in the development of its own teams. Except in rare cases, when G. W. was playing its highly touted foes here, the games took on the aspects of exhibitions rather than contests, what with the Colonials' defeats almost a foregone conclusion.

On the fistic front, Washington, after two years of legalized boxing, is still on the small-time. With Promoter Joe Turner having the field to himself, his plans for the presentation of boxing in Washington have taken the form of a recently completed arena, which, at capacity, can accommodate no more than 2,800. That's the tip-off on the kind of bouts in store for local fans—bouts that forbid the matching of nationally known fighters who must demand percentages and guarantees that are far beyond the possibilities of a promoter who can sell but 2,800 seats.

The only sport staged here in which world titles are at stake with any regularity, and then the regularity is too frequent, is the highly-suspicious game of wrestling. Washingtonians are steady clients of the various world wrestling champions, but when a wrestling "title" changes hands the reaction of the public is about as terrific as the recoil of a water pistol.

THE brightest ray of hope for Washington sports fans is the announcement that Walter E. O'Hara plans a revival of horse racing at Benning if Congress legalizes the sport. O'Hara's entrance into Washington as a racing promoter would place Washington in the big leagues of the turf world. On past performances, O'Hara qualifies as the ideal figure to head a racing association here.

His track in Rhode Island at Narragansett is already one of the show places of the turf. In Washington, he plans to post $50,000 for a National Capital Handicap that would be one of the richest races in the Nation, attracting the outstanding 3-year-olds following the running of the Preakness and the Derby. The man does nothing by halves.

Someday, somebody will wake up. The man who procures a hockey franchise for Washington, or who installs a team in the National Professional Football League, which is aching to co-operate with any responsible Washington promoter, will reap a grist of dollars. Until then, or until O'Hara is able to bring horse racing to the city, Washington will continue to be known as a big league sports town only by grace of the presence here of the Washington ball club.

Loyola Downs Santa Clara In Upset

Wins Its First Game From Favored Rivals, 7 to 0; Aided by Passes.

By the Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 1.—Loyola University, of Los Angeles, defeated the University of Santa Clara, 7 to 0, here today in an upset that brought lusty cheering from the 12,000 spectators. It was Loyola's first football victory over the Broncos.

The Loyola Lions drove 42 yards early in the final period for their touchdown. Two passes advanced the ball to the Bronco 30. Pete Lubisich went over on the next play. George Ratkovich, ace Lion place-kicker, was sent in and converted the extra point.

Misses Its Chance.

Santa Clara came back with a wild throwing attack and missed by inches a chance of scoring when Harold Carlsen tossed a beautiful 50-yard pass to Frank Smith, who was behind the secondary with a clear field ahead. But he could not hold on to the ball.

In the third period Falaschi recovered Lubisich's fumble on the Loyola 20, but Loyola held for downs on the 11.

Louis Boxes 5 Rounds As Training Time Starts

Pompton Lakes, N. J., Dec. 1 (AP). Joe Louis, of Detroit, sensational Negro fighter, today began training for his fight with Paulino Uzcudun, of Spain, in Madison Square Garden December 13.

Weighing 203¼, less than 3 pounds over his best fighting weight, Louis boxed five rounds with three spar mates. He knocked out Vincent Parrille, of South America, in the second round, then boxed two rounds with Lou Poster, of New York, and one with Micky Taylor, of Jersey City.

Williams Star Tops East's Scorers

Runs Up 96-Point Total; Stone, of Salem, Is Second With 80.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Eddie Stanley, Williams halfback, today was far in the van of the Eastern football scorers, with only Patrick, of Pittsburgh, having a chance to overhaul him before the last team had stowed away the moleskins.

The first six leaders of last week remained in the same position this week, with Stanley at the head of the list with 96 points and Stone, of Salem, second, with 80. Patrick was fourth, with 67 points, and although Pittsburgh has one more game to play, with Southern California on December 14, it is doubtful if the husky fullback can be able to tally the 29 points necessary for him to draw even with the Williams speedster whose shoes have been hung up for more than two weeks.

Albanese, of Syracuse, who is third, with 69 points, and O'Malley, of Trinity, who is tied with Patrick for fourth place, both have reached the end of their seasons.

Four Field Goals.

Patrick still led in field goals scored with four, but Sanbach, of Princeton, by virtue of converting after each of his team's five touchdowns against Yale on Saturday, drew abreast of Joe Handrahan, of Dartmouth, in points after touchdowns, with 24. Handrahan made one as his team lost to Columbia, 13-7. Besides scoring five points after touchdowns, Sandbach also booted a field goal in the rout of Yale.

'12th Man' Finally Convinced Princeton Is Tops in Football

By the Associated Press.

RAHWAY, N. J., Dec. 1.—Mike Mesco, ex-claimant of the title of "twelfth Dartmouth man" and hater extraordinary of Princeton, is finally convinced the Tiger eleven is tops in the college football world.

"They've got a great team, I'll have to admit that," he said today. "They ought to go to the Rose Bowl to show how good they really are."

The lunch wagon hash slinger was back on the job after a two-day vacation in which he saw the Princeton-Yale game at New Haven as guest of the Yale Club of New York. At first he was reluctant to talk, saying he wanted to "drop the whole affair," but he was persuaded to recount some of his experiences.

"I had a great time, never better," he said. "And I never met a nicer bunch in my life than those Yale fellows. After the game we went back to the Yale Club, had dinner and went to bed about 10 o'clock. I was dead tired as I didn't have much sleep the night before. Yeh, I stayed at the club Friday night, too, after going to a show.

"Sure, I was sorry Princeton won the way they did, but they've got a wonderful team. There's no question about that. Who do I think are their best men? Gary Levan and Constable. Yes, sir; they're good."

The conversation drifted back to the Princeton-Dartmouth game the week before and to Mesco's rise to fame through his admission he was the spectator who dashed from the stands into the Dartmouth line, helping to repel one Tiger charge.

"I don't know what happened at Princeton," Mike admitted. "The boys told me I was the guy and that started it all. I hear a fellow in Cranford says he was the one. If he takes the credit, it's okeh with me.

"I've taken a lot of ribbing about it. Kiddin' is kiddin' and foolin' is foolin.' But now I want to close the whole business. Okeh?"

Heads of 40 Colleges Urge Ban on Olympics

By the Associated Press.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 1.—Forty American educators, presidents of colleges in 27 States, today joined in a request to the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States and the American Olympic committee for withdrawal of American participation in the 1936 Olympic games in Berlin.

The announcement was made by Frank Kingdon, president of Dana College, in behalf of the signatories, together with a signed statement of the educators setting forth their reasons for requesting American withdrawal.

The statement said in part:

"It is our considered judgment, based upon the record of events that have transpired in Germany for the past 2½ years, that the inequities and discrimination practiced against Jews, Catholics, Protestants, labor, Masons and all independents are perpetuated in the field of sports and in the Olympic games.

"We believe further that these games are being used by Nazi Germany as an instrument for the propagation of her ideals which represent the destruction of democratic and progressive society."

Among those signing the statement were Tyler Dennett, president of Williams College; Frank P. Graham, of the University of North Carolina; Walter L. Lingle, of Davidson; Harry W. McPherson, of Illinois Wesleyan; Kenneth C. M. Sills, of Bowdoin, Walter C. Tredtin, of the University of Dayton; Mary E. Woolley, of Mount Holyoke; Alfred Humor, of the University of Mississippi, and Brother Albert, of St. Mary's California.

Giants Retain Eastern Pro Grid Title

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 1.—Elvin Richards, former Simpson College player, carried the New York Giants to a 21-to-14 National Professional Football League victory over the Philadelphia Eagles and retention of their Eastern division championship today.

Breaking loose for 32 yards in a last-period dash to a touchdown, the hard-running halfback broke a 14-to-14 first-half deadlock. He also kicked the extra point.

A succession of touchdown plays made up the first half of the battle. The game was hardly two minutes old when Newman, Giants' quarterback fumbled. Stumpy Thomason picked up the loose leather on the Giants' 34 and ran down to the 3 before being stopped. Three plunges left the Eagles still a foot shy of a touchdown, then Leonard pushed through for the first score. Reese place-kicked the extra point, as he did after Manske's tally in the next period.

Pass Intercepted.

Hein's interception of a pass on his 33 started the Giants off to the first-half deadlock. After rushing to their 44, the Giants startled the Eagles' defense with four successive passes that netted 56 yards and a touchdown by Singer. Then Danowski passed successively to Burnett, Goodwin twice and Singer, the last from the 7-yard line, to go over for the second touchdown. Molenda scored both extra points from placement.

Gaining possession on their 41 in the second period, the Eagles fooled the champions with a fake plunge that evolved into a pass from Storm to Manske for 59 yards and the second touchdown. The blond wing from Northwestern made the catch between Hein and Danowski, then raced away from the Giant stars to the goal line, 22 yards away.

U. S. Ski Association Backs Olympic Games

Chicago, Dec. 1 (AP).—The National Amateur Ski Association at its annual meeting today unanimously voted indorsement of American participation in the Olympic games at Berlin.

"We voted 100 per cent in favor of United States participation in both the winter games at Garmisch-Partenkirken and the track and field and other games at Berlin," said H. A. Grienden, of Duluth, Minn., who retired today from the office of secretary. "We approve the stand of President Avery Brundage and the Olympic committee."

Grienden was made historian for life.

Frank Haberl, of Denver, Wendell Robie of Auburn, Calif., Park Carpenter, of Boston, and Peter Hostmark, of Seattle, Wash., were elected to the executive committee.

Pay Players Outright, Tennessee Paper Says

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 1 (AP). Outright pay for college football players is advocated in an edtiorial in this week's issue of the Orange and White, University of Tennessee student paper.

"Why should college boys be asked to slave physically and allow their bodies to be battered merely for free publicity?" the editorial asks.

Tiger Official's Letter Stirs Speculation Over Invitation.

By the Associated Press.

PALO ALTA, Calif., Dec. 1.—Stanford was believed today to be searching Eastern gridirons for a Rose Bowl football opponent, but whether the undefeated Princeton team was the object of its attention was merely a matter of speculation.

The lone official able to speak with any authority, Graduate Alfred R. Masters, was willing to talk—but not on the subject of Stanford's New Year's Day opponent at Pasadena.

He said he might not make any announcement for a day or two.

Interviewers, trying to worm out the identity of the visiting eleven, deduced Stanford was looking Eastward on the theory that otherwise the highly eligible Southern Methodist University team would have received the invitation by now.

Willing to Take Bid.

S. M. U. not only is willing to move into the Rose Bowl, but proved its class yesterday in the 20-to-14 victory over Texas Christian.

Despite Princeton's Big Three agreement with Yale and Harvard not to play postseason games, reports have persisted on the Stanford campus the Tigers might yet be persuaded to come West for the big pigskin classic.

Speculation as to a possible change of attitude was heightened by a letter from Burnham N. Dell, chairman of the council of athletics at Princeton to H. C. Willett, of the University of Southern California, chairman of the Pacific Coast conference.

"Princeton Alumnni and undergraduates have been greatly disturbed,' Dell wrote, 'by the manner in which a recent editorial of the daily Princetonian, the undergraduate newspaper, has misrepresented the attitude of the university toward the annual Rose Bowl game.

"The viewpoint of the editorial is not that of the Athletic authorities of Princeton."

Princeton, he said, would consider it an honor to be ranked as a Rose Bowl competitor, but added the university is committed to a policy of not playing postseason contests.

Reached later tonight at Princeton, however, Dell reiterated that the school was not contemplating a postseason contest of any kind and that the dual agreement with Yale was "the expression of a long-established policy to which it would adhere of its own free will."

terse statement by the faculty athletic control board today definitely eliminated Notre Dame's Ramblers as a possible Eastern representative in the annual Rose Bowl football classic.

The statement read:

"In view of the widespread discussion relative to post-season games, the faculty board in control of athletics of the University of Notre Dame feels it necessary to call attention to the fact that sinnce 1925 all such invitations have been declined."

L. S. U. Likely Choice For Sugar Bowl Game

New Orleans, Dec. 1 (AP).—Louisiana State University's 41-0 rout of Tulane made it the favorite today as the Southern representative in the annual Sugar Bowl football game here on New Year's Day.

The other team, it was understood, will be picked from a group consisting of Nebraska, Holy Cross, Fordham, Marquette and Southern Methodist University.

East's Racing Scene Shifts to Charles Town Track Today

Field of Ten Named for Feature

Maryland Horses to Vie; Daily Double Offered; Post Time 1:30 P.M.

By Walter Haight.

THE bugle's call to colors, the bell closing the mutuel machines, the thud of hoofs to the cry of "they're off," the gleeful shrieks of the longshot player making his killing, the groans of the beaten favorite betters, the shouts as prices are displayed, the rustle of bills and clinkle of change at the pay-off and all the other sounds that go to make a day at the racing will echo off the nearby Blue Ridge Mountains this afternoon as the "sport of kings" returns to Charles Town.

The sporty, 6-furlong track, which came through with a successful meeting last summer of two years of experimentation, will offer the only racing in the East for the next 12 days. Seven races are scheduled each day with post time at 1:30 o'clock and the daily double, the oldest in this section, will again be featured.

Near Harper's Ferry.

Located 10 miles from Harpers Ferry in that northeastern spur of West Virginia that borders the bank of the Shenandoah River, Charles Town is about 70 miles from Washington. Motorists have their choice of two routes from this city, both offering good roads. Through Virginia, the route goes through Leesburg while through Maryland it is necessary to go via Frederick.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will operate its special train, leaving Union Station at 11:30 a. m. and returning after the seventh race.

Entries for today reveal a fair brand of horses, including a majority of those which campaigned in Maryland this fall. The feature race—the fifth—has drawn Jinnee, Sunned, Flying Dere and others which earned their way on the mile courses.

Offers Maryland Horses.

Almost every race includes in the overnight entries horses that are the result of Maryland campaigning. These, meeting the best of the horses generally referred to as "the best of the half-milers," will add zest to the contests.

The track is in excellent condition. General Manager Al Boyle has had a staff of men at work for more than a week putting the running strip in shape and barring rain before post time, the horses will compete on a fast track.

Three Games Tonight In Heurich Cage Loop

The second week of play in the Heurich Basketball Cup Series opens tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the Heurich Gym. The Flashes will meet Resettlement; Fort Myer and Bolling Field come together in the second contest, and Rinaldi Tailors shoot baskets with Acacia.

The week's schedule follows:

Wednesday, 7:30, St. Mary Celts vs. D. H.; 8:30, Olmsted vs. Acacia; 9:30, Coffey Sales vs. Bovello Plumbers; Friday, 7:30, Little Tavern vs, Fort Myer; 8:30, Resettlement vs. D. & H., and 9:30, Rinaldi vs. Bolling Field.

Furr Choice Over Silas Tonight in Arena's Inaugural Fight

Both Boxers In Fine Trim For Battle

Joe Green Withdraws, Burl Shifted to Meet Billy Landers.

By Bill McCormick.

AFTER an absence of many weeks, boxing will return to Washington tonight at the new Joe Turner Arena, Fourteenth and W streets northwest.

Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, and Sid Silas, who has been campaigning hereabouts for more than a year, will be featured in the main event which is scheduled for 15 rounds with the title at stake.

A capacity or near-capacity crowd is expected to flock to the fight site, which is arranged to accommodate 2,800 for boxing. Many of those will be on hand to see the third meeting between Silas and Furr. Others will come just for a view of the new arena, which is the finest of its kind in the South.

Furr, winner on a technical knockout in the first engagement between the main eventers and held to a draw in thir second bout, will rule a slight betting favorite in the rubber match.

The new arena, located just off Fourteenth street, has an elaborate facade, lighted by neon signs in the modern manner. A long lobby, entirely reconstructed, holds the ticket offices, concession stands and telephone booths.

All Seats Close in.

The fighting pit, itself, is slightly larger than the now defunct Riding and Hunt Club, but much more tastefully arranged. The bleacher seats are especially constructed for the site and painted a uniform color. The walls are freshly painted and the building is heated by a large steam plant. There are no pillars in the building and no seat is farther than 50 feet from the ring.

The arena is located in the 20-cent taxi zone and is fed by the Fourteenth and Eleventh street car lines as well as several bus lines. Admissions will be scaled from $1.15 general admission to $1.65 and $2.30.

A promising preliminary card, scheduled to start at 8:30 p. m., will bolster the main event. A break came in the supporting card yesterday when Joe Green, local featherweight, who was to have boxed Eddie Burl, was forced to withdraw because of a bad cold.

Burl has been shifted to meet Billy Landers, the Norfolk veteran, instead of Billy Lancaster, who has been dropped from the card. Joe Temes, a main-event fighter, has been dropped in for a six-rounder against one John Cabelo of New York.

POST PREDICTIONS.

Bouts are rated from A (excellent) to G (Phooey).

MAIN EVENT—Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, vs. Sid Silas, New York, welterweights; 15 rounds for the title. Rated B. These two willing workers, always pleasing to watch in action, are the finest matching fetile of their careers for this one. It is a fitting bout to open the new arena. Furr boasts the edge in hitting power, but Silas is a much better boxer and he also can wallop when the occasion demands. Silas should win the decision after a hard battle.

PRELIMINARIES—Eddie Burl, Jacksonville, vs. Billy Landers, Norfolk, featherweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. A pair of slap-bang nogging knockers who can not fail to supply action against each other. Landers is just a bit fresher in the ring game and should take the measure of the Florida veteran.

Joe Temes, Florida, vs. John Cabele, New York, featherweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Temes, a main bout performer, is too well nown to need any introduction. Cabelo is the Golden Glove winner for 1935 in his class. Temes still should be able to bast him anyway.

Jimmy Ferrar, Baltimore, vs. Kirk Burk, Washington, heavyweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Ferrar stopped Bobby Buckley the last time out, but Burk has a natural ring ability, courage and wallop. Burk by a knockout.

Joe Dotey, Washington, vs. Stanford Carrier, Washington, welterweights; 4 rounds. Rated D. Carrier.

Annapolis Team Loses To Southeast A. C., 12-0

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 1.—The undefeated Southeast A. C. football team of Washington came through in the final quarter here today to defeat the Southern A. C. of Annapolis, 12 to 0. The visitors broke a scoreless battle by staging steady marches down the field in the last period, with Halfback Cassedy plunging over for both scores.

Plaza Beats Richmond In Southern Pin League

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 1.—The Plaza Duckpin team defeated the Richmond Statesmen, 3,003 to 2,799, at the Plaza this afternoon in a Southern Men's League clash.

The Baltimore outfit took four of the five games, losing the second by a margin of a single pin. Seim had a bad time "picking" pins off in this session, winding up with an 84. He staged a fine 155 comeback in the next game.

Boston Redskins Finally Win Football Game

Boston, Dec. 1 (AP).—Boston's sadly battered Redskins completed their national Pro League home season today by putting on a brilliant fourth period rally to gain a 13-to-3 victory over the Pittsburg Pirates.

A crowd of 5,000 braved a heavy snowstorm to bid farewell to Eddie Casey's charges.

The Redskins, whose previous victory came in their opening game last September, appeared doomed to suffer their ninth consecutive setback until they made their surprising and belated stand.

Lorraine Gulli Downed by Champion

Best Woman Bowler Beats Washington Expert in Two-Day Match.

IDA SIMMONS, of Norfolk, Va., national women's bowling champion, decisively trounced Lorraine Gulli, second-ranking player, yesterday at the Silver Spring alleys in the wind-up games of their 20-game match. The conclusion of the two-day match found the champion leading by 119 pins.

At the start of the afternoon set Miss Gulli indicated that she would overcome the 70-pin lead, which Miss Simmons had piled up in the Saturday games, by winning the first two games, 133 to 123 and 102 to 90. However, the champion rallied and was never headed thereafter.

Miss Simmons' rolled high game, 140, and high set, 642, during the 20-game stretch, but failed to break or equal any existing records. In yesterday's competition she accounted for 30 spares and 4 strikes, while Miss Gulli managed to accumulate 19 spares and 6 strikes.

In the final totals the Norfolk star had spilled 2,340 pins, while marking up 64 spares and 10 strikes, as compared with the local girl's 2,221 pins, 44 spares and 14 strikes. The 20-game match drew a combined attendance of 2,500 spectators.

chance. The Sailors rolled up 17 first downs to Army's 11, had 9 scoring opportunities to Army's 5, and wore down the Cadets with superior manpower, but these were scant consolations.

Princeton's biggest margin of triumph over Yale, 38 to 7, also was deceptive and by no means indicative of the gallant fight of the Elis against overwhelming odds. Tiger manpower and forcing tactics finally resulted in a last-period rout, during which four touchdowns were scored. Yale had exhausted its resources in holding its ancient rival to a scant ten points for three periods.

Top team in the East, with a powerhouse that rolled up half of its 256 points in the final period, Princeton shares the national honors with Minnesota and Southern Methodist.

The national roundup finds three other teams each once beaten but nevertheless entitled to high ranking and entree to the best gridiron company in the land. This trio consists of Texas, Christian, Stanford, the Far West's Rose Bowl choice, and Louisiana State, new champion of the Southeastern Conference and the successor to Alabama as the dominant football power of the old South.

A. U. Star Wins Scoring Title In District

RAIN, mud and some stout opposition supplied by visiting troupes of football squads held the contenders for District scoring honors at a standstill last week and assured Walter Dick, American University halfback, of the 1935 title.

"Irish" Carroll, Catholic University's ace halfback, Bill Duff and Don Gibeau, Georgetown; and Ray Hanken and Bruce Mahan, of George Washington, were the only players to score and their efforts made no change in the standings. "Tuffy" Leemans, of George Washington, remained in second place with his 42 points, while Bill Guckeyson, Charlie Ellinger—both of Maryland—and Bill Adamaitis, Catholic U., continued their deadlock for third place.

Guckeyson and Ellinger have one more opportunity as Maryland faces its arch-rival, Western Maryland, Saturday at Baltimore, but if the Terrors hold the Terps as well as they did Georgetown, they appear to have little chance of improving their rating.

Won Seven Out of Eight.

Catholic University finished the season with the highest ranking among local teams by virtue of its seven victories in eight games, while George Washington pulled itself up into second place when it trumped North Dakota, sending Maryland down a step into third position.

One of the queerest records of the season is that of Wilson Teachers College which managed to win the final game of its first football campaign, and thereby shove Gallaudet, a tried campaigner, into the cellar.

Silver Spring Eleven Trims Warwicks, 6-0

The Silver Spring Merchants avenged an early season tie and brought its season average to the .500 mark yesterday by defeating the Warwicks, 6 to 0, on the Silver Spring field.

The Merchants scored in the second quarter when Osborne plunged over from the 2-yard line after a passing attack from Osborne to Clark had carried the ball 70 yards. The Warwicks' lone chance to score came in the opening minutes of the game, but Ackey fumbled on the 5-yard line.

Flashes Flash.

With Fullback Quigley in fine fettle, the Northwest Flashes walloped the Kenilworth gridders yesterday, 14 to 0, on the Kenilworth field.

Terps, With Only One Veteran Lost, Has Best D. C. Outlook

WITH the collegiate sports docket cleared of all gridiron activities for another season, with exception of the Maryland-Western Maryland affair which will be played Saturday at Baltimore, the court is open for preliminary basket ball arguments, with Catholic University taking the floor for the opening debate a week from tonight.

The Cardinals confidently expect one of their best seasons since "Fod" Cotton took over the class five years ago, although it will be difficult to match his best record, which shows only three defeats, or even last winter's score of 12 victories in 17 games. Cotton's biggest task will be converting a few forwards into guards. The place literally is overrun with forwards, while the graduation of Co-captains Babe Gearty and Abe Rosenfield left the squad devoid of defensive talent.

Georgetown Ready.

Georgetown, with a wealth of material up from the freshmen, has been out for three weeks and is just about ready for the starting whistle. Don Gibeau, chosen on the second All-Eastern Intercollegiate Conference team last season, Harry Hassin, Tom Nolan, Karl and Buddy Nau, Ben Zola, Mario Gregorio, Sis Esenstad and Tom Keating seem to be the best of Coach Fred Mesmer's collection. Georgetown will miss Ed Hargaden, its smooth and sharp-shooting forward, but it should compile a better record than it did last season.

The season opens next week against Western Maryland. The first league game will be played December 18, with Temple supplying the opposition.

Maryland, perhaps, has the brightest outlook for a winning season with all of last year's squad intact, with the exception of "South" Sothoron, and several promising sophomores available. Waverly Wheeler and "Little Knocky" Thomas, a couple of youngsters who made their marks in inter-high school competition, will fit in well with Coach Burt Shipley's plans.

Willis Is Key Man.

Vic Willis, gangling center, will be the key man in the Terp attack. His supporting cast will include Al Waters, Charley Keller, Bill Bryant, Coleman Headley and Bernie Buscher.

The season should find Tuffy Leemans leading George Washington's quest for victories and also a successful battle for the individual scoring crown. Leemans developed tremendously last winter on his first foray into the basketball world and should be even better this year.

The Colonials will have a new coach at the helm in Bill Reinhart, who probably will follow the Western style of play which has been in vogue at the downtown school these last several years. Ted Cottingham and Tim Stapleton are a couple of good looking prospects.

Gallaudet's squad is due to report today and Coach Wally Krugg will have the same old problem to contend with, a lack of material. But the Kendall Green mentor does have a few lads back from last year and it is around these that he will build his team.

Wilson Teachers lost several important men even before the close of last year and it is doubtful if "Doc" White can muster a potent quintet, although Wilson will be represented on the court.

A. U. Outlook Bright.

Walter Young's prospects at American University are brighter than they have been in four years and with good material to work with he expects to produce a winner for the Eagles. Young has 11 first-class men on the varsity squad proper, and a group of some 21 aspirants working out with Assistant Coach Paul Smith.

Southeastern University, too, will try the old peach basket game this year, with Howard Mann coaching. The team will play an abbreviated schedule, however, beginning with Gallaudet on February 14. Ray Swann, Millier Jacobson and Bill Monger, comprise the nucleus of the team.

Maryland A. C. Is Tied, 0-0, By Clancy

By the Associated Press.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 1.—The Maryland A. C. of Washington, leading semiprofessional football team of the Capital, was held to a 0-0 tie here today by the Clancy A. C. of Norfolk. A crowd of 4,000 watched the battle in which the visitors accumulated but three first downs to the home team's five.

The only scoring threat of consequence occurred late in the game when Gene Augusterfer, Maryland A. C. fullback and former Catholic University star, intercepted a Clancy pass on the Norfolk 35-yard line and raced to the 22 before being hauled down. The Washington team was unable to knock off the remaining distance, however, as the Clancy line braced stubbornly and the backfield knocked down the Maryland A. C.'s desperate passes.

9 Passes Out of 16.

The visitors' passing attack, however, was the chief worry facing the Clancymen, who saw 9 tosses in 16 attempts completed against them. The Maryland A. C. broke up six out of 7 of the Norfolk pass attempts.

The game was the second between the teams this season. The Washington team nosed out Clancy, 3 to 0, in thir first meeting on the field goal by Willis Benner, coach and star end. Benner, Dick Nelson and Augusterfer led the Maryland attack today.

Shu, Star G. W. High Fullback, Tops Scorers With 103 Points

By John R. Vosburgh.

AMONG several points of interest to be discussed herein are the 103 points scored during the past football season by Mr. Paul Shu of the Alexandria Shues, who has lifted the family name out of the realm of footwear into the realm of football. In 10 games, young Mr. Shu, of George Washington High, amassed those 103 points to make himself the leading high and prep school scorer of the Capital area by a wide, wide margin.

In games, the cleated shoes of Mr. Shu were manipulated up and down various gridirons with such serpentine rapidity as to cross opposing goal-lines for no less than 17 touchdowns. By rapid mathematics it is calculated that the average scoring done by the star fullback was more than 10 points per game.

Shu led his nearest rival, Zan Carver, of St. Alban's, by 26 points. Zoomin' Zan, however, catapulted in his hard-driving style to 13 touchdowns in 8 games and 5 points after touchdown—an average of well over 9 points per contest.

From this angle, both Shu and Carver must concede a point or two—yes, more than two—to Adam Zinkievich, of the Devit Prep football team. Adam was the first man—the first man to play only three games in the District in a long time and still score 48 points. Needless to say, his average point total was 16 points per game, somewhat better than Mr. Shu's.

Billy Richardson, Central halfback, led the inter-high scorers by 10 points with 36 points in four games but was fifth for the sectional honors, scoring 43 points in ten games. Len Hippler, Washington-Lee's big fullback, was an easy third with 60 points—an average of a touchdown per game.

Eddie O'Brien, Washington-Lee's place-kicking right guard, was the best point-after-touchdown man in or around the District. His bulky right toe plunked 11 placements between the goal posts in 18 attempts.

Intentional Fumble Wins; Protest Filed

The Anacostia Eagles and Congress Heights yesterday played a football game which the latter won, 6 to 0, in the closing seconds of the last quarter. But the Eagles registered a protest last night.

Shaw, Heights fullback, was tackled on the 2-yard line and in falling fumbled intentionally, it seems, the ball rolling into the end zone, where a Heights man recovered. Officials ruled that Congress Heights had scored a touchdown but the Eagles felt that their opponents should have been penalized for throwing an illegal pass.

Yesterday's Results.

Mitchell Brothers, 7; Silver Spring, 0.
Sun Radio, 2; Sabaudia, 0.
Littoria, 2; Occoquan, 2.

Next Sunday's Games.

Mitchell Brothers vs. Sabaudia, at Bennings, 1 p. m.
Sun Radio vs. Littoria, at Bennings, 3:30.
Occoquan, at Silver Spring, 3:30.

SURPRISES were registered in the Recreation Soccer League yesterday as the Sun Radio experienced difficulty in scoring over Sabaudia and Occoquan held Littoria to a 0-0 tie. The Sun team finally triumphed, 2 to 0.

The first goal to get past Harold Smith, Sabaudia goalkeeper, was the result of a misskick by Aquilino, which struck Harding and rebounded through. The second goal, also from Harding's foot, went through as Stration obscured Smith's view.

Deprived of the services of some of its regulars, Littoria still ruled a pregame favorite over Occoquan, but was forced to battle fiercely to wind up on equal terms.

Shoots 85—15—70 to Set Pace; Two Tied for Manor Prize.

J. E. HUGHES won the Marmion Cup yesterday at Beaver Dam Country Club in the last important golf tournament of the season at the Landover course. He scored 85-15—70 to set the pace in four classes.

R. F. Sheehy, 81-9—72, took first in the top flight, with J. F. Hoover, 88-10—78, second. Tied for third were C. Williams, 85-9—76; Forrest Thompson, 79-3—76; Johnny Miller, 79-3—76; Jack Palmer, 82-6—76 and W. Bion Moore, 82-6—76.

Winners in the second flight were W. O'Brien, 87-12—75, and C. E. Purdy, 88-12—76. M. C. Stern, 94-21—73; D. W. Smith, 92-17—75, and J. V. Savarese, 98-19—79, won in the third division, and R. Murphy, 99-25—74; J. R. Greene, 101-23—78, and B. W. Konopa, 103-24—79, in the fourth flight.

G. Emerson Moore, 84-8—76, and L. K. Ashford, 81-10—76, tied for first prize in the turkey tournament at Manor Club. Other winners were A. L. Alderman, Ed Teague, E. H. Campbell and J. J. Buckley.

Elaborate ceremonies will feature the induction into office of president of Mrs. Ralph W. Payne, women's golf chairman of Congressional, at the annual meeting and election of the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association Thursday afternoon at Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

Others brought in on the same ticket with Mrs. Payne, who will be elected, are Mrs. J. Franklin Gross, of Indian Spring, first vice president; Mrs. Roy C. Miller, of Kenwood, second vice president; David McPherson, of Manor, secretary, and Mrs. Theodore Peyser, Woodmont, treasurer.

Mrs. Payne will succeed Mrs. C. K. Wing, formerly of Army and Navy.

Golf, food and business are on the program of the Mid-Atlantic Association of Greenkeepers, which will hold its monthly get-together today. A tournament is scheduled at 1 p. m. at Columbia Country Club's course, a dinner at 6 p. m. and meeting, at 7:30 at the Hamilton Hotel. Omcers will be elected.

ROMANCE of the WEST INDIES

by Eugene C. Van Wyk

All the beauty and romance of these lovely, lazy islands . . with their background of adventure and daring . . will be pictured in this lecture. Mr. van Wyk will paint a brilliant picture of the West Indies' kaleidoscope of races—the Dutch at Curacao, the French at Martinique, the British at Jamaica, the Hindus at Trinidad, the Spanish at Venezuela, the Orientals at Panama. There are pirates' castles, a real Hindu temple, an asphalt lake and many other unusual sights that bespeak the glamorous romance typical of these islands.

Processing Tax Shifted, AAA Official Avers

Passed on to Consumer or Farmer Made to Suffer, Black Says.

By the Associated Press.

An assertion was made yesterday by one of the Agriculture Department's chieftains that the AAA's processing taxes have either been passed on to the consumer or taken indirectly from the farmer's pocket.

Dr. A. G. Black, in his annual report as chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, hinted also that he considered some better means of financing the farm adjustment program might be found.

"Studies of the effects of processing taxes have been made," Dr. Black said, "particularly in relation to wheat, cotton and hogs. Briefly the findings are that processors in general have not absorbed the taxes, but that they have been passed on to the consumer or have tended to lower prices to farmers below what these prices would be if some means other than processing were available for financing the program."

"Farm Income Raised."

At the same time, however, he maintained that "along with benefit payments to farmers and with price increases due to the control of production," the income of wheat, cotton and hog producers "has been raised."

Coincidently, a new attack on the AAA came from the American Liberty League. In a statement the league asserted that "existing regimentation of the farmers of the United States constituted a definite challenge to the American form of Government."

It contended that the financial difficulties of farmers were "seized upon as a political opportunity and used to force them into signing agreements." The result, it added, was a condition "bordering closely upon peasantry or serfdom."

In addition to contending the AAA is unconstitutional, the league asserted that devices for regulating production "fit into a system wherein individual freedom is subordinated to the whims of the Government as in Communist Russia, Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany."

New Kind of Co-operation.

In his annual report, Dr. Black praised particularly the marketing agreement provisions of the agricultural adjustment act. These provisions, he said, "make possible a new kind of co-operation among farmers, dealers, and processors for the purpose of improving marketing conditions and raising the incomes of certain groups of farmers, partly through regulating the flow of farm products to the market, regulating the qualities and grades sold, standardizing charges for processing and handling, and deciding upon minimum prices to be paid to the farmers."

A wide range of activities was reported for the bureau, from emergency drought surveys and the listing of feed supplies, to specific economic research on current problems and the issuance of market reports.

From Washington, 21 market stations and 42 field offices, Dr. Black said, the bureau issued more than 11,000,000 mimeographed market-news reports. The bureau has a leased wire system of more than 9,000 miles.

FilmDanceDirector Faces Murder Trial

Busby Berkeley Is Charged in 3 Traffic Deaths.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Dec. 1.—Charged with causing three deaths in an automobile accident, Busby Berkeley, motion-picture dance director, goes to trial tomorrow on three counts of second-degree murder.

If convicted Berkeley would be subject to a sentence of five years to life imprisonment on each count.

Berkeley is accused of causing the deaths of William Von Briesen, Mrs. Ada Von Briesen and Miss Dorothea Daley, when his automobile was involved in a three-car collision September 8.

Von Briesen's wife, Manon, and his sister, Laura, still are confined to a Santa Monica hospital with injuries received in the accident.

David Coleman, district attorney's deputy assigned to prosecute the case, said he would attempt to prove Berkeley had been drinking before the accident, was driving on the wrong side of the road and was operating his machine in a reckless manner.

Job Insurance Law Obstacles Are Cited

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—The American Association for Social Security announced today that constitutional obstacles of many kinds will make it difficult "if not impossible" for all but seven States of the Union to establish unemployment insurance in compliance with the chief provisions of the Federal social security act.

It stated the only States definitely permitted to impose the excise tax on pay rolls for unemployment insurance which would bring the State and its employers within the operations of the Federal act are Connecticut, Maryland, Michigan, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York and Vermont.

Calvert Report Shows 152 on Direct Relief

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Prince Frederick, Md., Dec. 1.—The Calvert County Welfare Board in its annual report revealed that there are 152 persons on direct relief in the county.

The report set forth that of that number 110 are unemployables. The unemployable class is divided as follow: Old-age cases, 72; women with dependent children, 17; illness, 1; permanently incapacitated, 16; mentally ill, 3, and 1 orphan.

On The Air Today

DOWN near Skyland, Va., in the Shenandoah National Park, is a little log school—Corbin Hollow School by name. In attendance are many youngsters who never heard a radio program. As a matter of fact, according to interested members of the Park Service, who have contributed their labors in building necessary additions to the log building, some of the pupils' parents never have heard a program.

Reading of the radio sets being contributed to worthy institutions by George's Radio Co., R. Roy Brown, of Skyland, has written requesting a set for Corbin Hollow. Unfortunately, George's has no battery sets available—and Corbin Hollow is far from electric lines.

Perhaps some "On the Air" reader can help. Mr. Brown will pick up the set on one of his regular visits to Washington—and will see that it is properly installed. If you have a battery set from your old radio days, or know of one available for Corbin Hollow's youngsters, write or telephone the Radio Editor of The Post.

The challenge of Frank Ford Burnett, an undergraduate of George Washington University, who proposes to form a team to meet that of any other District university or college in a Post Spelling Bee contest, goes unanswered. Can it be that American, Catholic, Georgetown et al. have no spellers? Prof. Douglas Bement has agreed to sponsor the George Washington team. Red-blooded collegians wishing to accept the challenge may communicate with either Prof. Bement or the proprietor of this column.

For the late dancers: Joe Venuti leaves Dallas this week-end to go to Los Angeles, where he will play at the Palomar until replaced by Jimmy Dorsey about the first of the year. Reggis Childs left this week for Houston. You've been hearing him from Essex House in Newark. Charley Boulanger also left Chicago's Oriental Gardens for a series of one-night stands and probably will not be heard on the air for awhile.

Helen Hayes will have her hands full when "Victoria Regina" opens on Broadway December 26. Tuesday nights the theater production will play second fiddle to radio; Miss Hayes has decided to perform in radio's "New Penny" and the theater will be dark as a result. But Monday nights, when "The New Penny" is broadcast to the West Coast, she will be compelled to rush to the studio from the theater, probably in the robes of Victoria. Playing the modern heroine of "The New Penny" in regal garments of many years past should tax any actresses' emoting powers. To make up for playing hookey from the footlights on Tuesday nights the theater will probably require an extra matinee of the stage production each week.

Take Mystery Out of Banking, Fleming Says

A. B. A. Head Announces Series of Regional Conferences.

New York, Dec. 1.—Plans for a series of regional conferences by the American Bankers Association aimed to aid in the development of banking services along sound lines and preserves "the public's newly recovered confidence in banks," were announced today by Robert V. Fleming, president Riggs National Bank, Washington, and president of the association.

"We shall ask for the welcome aid from everyone who believes that the strengthening of our private system of banking is essential to national progress," Mr. Fleming says in his announcement. The emergency of the depression which required an unusual degree of governmental participation in banking is practically ended, he says, and "we now have the advantage of knowing just what the new banking laws are, even if we have not yet had time to discover how they will work out in practice." The program of the conference will deal with practical phases of bank activity and will stress public and customer relations.

"Banking is a business of human relationships," Mr. Fleming's statement says. "Perhaps bankers in the past have not been sufficiently conscious of the fact that they are actually engaged in a from of real public service. But we know that it is not enough to be technically good bankers. We must be public-conscious in our good banking. We must realize that public understanding of and sympathy with a bank's aims and problems are just as essential to the soundness of its structure as are good loans and investments.

Confidence Best Asset.

"We have had ample proof that the best assets in the world are vulnerable if the people lose confidence in their banks and the men who operate them. The conferences will emphasize the importance of bankers infusing their daily routine with a spirit of public service and of finding ways to aid people to understand banking functions and the requirements of our profession. We must take the mystery out of banking."

This does not mean, Mr. Fleming adds, that "we contemplate a gigantic campaign of high-pressure publicity designed, borrowing a threadbare phrase, 'to re-sell banking to the public.' We neither want nor need such a program. What we seek, rather, is the most effective means of doing our daily jobs at our individual banks and building a solid foundation for practical understanding between the banks and their respective communities."

The best possible publicity, his statement says, "is to be found in careful, complete, and intelligent service, regardless of whether that service is positive, that is, the granting of loans or the administration of trusts, or negative, as in the case of loan application refusals. Unfortunately, the community never knows how well it may be served when a bank declines to lend to a prospective borrower who, for one reason or another, does not meet its requirements. But part of our job is to explain—not defend—our position with respect to credit extension."

Bank Stocks Gain; Surety Shares Dip

New York, Dec. 1.—New York City bank stocks continued their upward movement during the past week. The aggregate market value of 16 leading issues according to Hoit, Rose & Troster, closed the week at $1,721,451,000, compared with $1,696,649,000 at the close of the previous week, a net increase of $24,802,000, or 1.46 per cent. The low for the year, reached on April 30, was $1,226,175,000 and the 1935 high, on November 20, was $1,747,776,000.

Insurance stocks in the New York City market registered a slight decline during the past week after setting a new high for the year on November 23. The aggregate value of 20 leading fire and casualty insurance issues reached $649,663,000 on November 23 and closed the week at $645,499,000, compared with $645,988,000 at the close of the previous week, a decrease of $489,000 or 0.08 per cent. The low for the year, reached on March 14, was $484,613,000.

New General Motors Real Estate Head

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president of General Motors Corporation, announces the appointment of Daniel C. McGuire as president and general manager of the Argonaut Realty Corporation, which has charge of General Motors' real estate operations in the United States and Canada.

McGuire, who succeeds the late Harrie T. Hickey, also has been appointed vice president of General Motors Building Corporation, Detroit, and president of Modern Housing Corporaton.

Exports of Cotton Continue Expansion

New York, Dec. 1.—Exports of American cotton were larger this week than in the corresponding week last year, according to the weekly report of the New York Cotton Exchange. They totaled 221,000 bales against 98,000 last year.

Total exports during the season to date are 2,383,000 bales against 1,849,000 in the corresponding period of last season.

Foreign Events Chill Market Despite Good News at Home

Notable Development Is Rise in Railroad Net Income to the Highest Level Reached in Five Years.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 1.—Stocks drifted lower last week as confused traders, now cheered by domestic industry, now depressed by foreign news, backed away to take another look.

The week produced much to brighten Wall street's disposition. Automobile output soared to the highest plane since November, 1929, with the exception of one week in November of 1930. Meanwhile the steel industry was no laggard, topping all peaks since a year ago, July.

Nevertheless the financial district could not forget that France was struggling desperately to hold its monetary fortress and that the word "sanctions" was a two-edged sword not yet definitely returned to its sheath.

Franc Status Better.

Laval's success in his first-line defense of the franc left Wall street in a better frame of mind, but his promise to stand behind Great Britain in the matter of sanctions against Italy recalled to many the "war scare" selling of the early fall.

President Roosevelt's assurance that the appropriations peak had been passed and that budget shrinkage lies ahead swerved financial sights abruptly back to home credit and monetary problems.

Although the Associated Press average of 60 stocks rose .1 of a point to 54.5 on Saturday, there was a net loss of 1.5 points for the week.

The resistance of the railroad shares to the general decline analysts explained in terms of the contra-seasonal rise in loadings and net operating income for October, which rose to the highest level in five years.

Washington As A Factor.

The scramble of utility holding companies to announce their intentions not to register with the securities and exchange commission, the United States Supreme Court order restraining AAA taxes by rice millers, the stoppage of Federal Emergency Relief Agency payments, the continued heavy tide of excess reserves washing against markets all passed through the hopper of market "financial sentiment."

In the bond department three forces were at work. Money in search of work kept low yield bonds steady. Unrest abroad depressed foreign loans, while loadings and income improvement served as bracers for rail obligations.

Pressure on the grain market lopped 2¼ to 2½ cents from wheat futures, while corn gave up ⅞ to 2½ cents. Cotton yielded 25 to 85 cents a bale. The price of silver at New York remained fixed at 65⅝ cents an ounce, on the peg where it has hung without change since the end of August.

Cotton Stocks Less Than 5-Year Average

New York, Dec. 1.—The total stock of American cotton in the world was approximately 16,981,000 bales at the end of October, compared with 17,295,000 on the same date last year, according to the New York Cotton Exchange Service. In the past five years the average end-October stock has been 20,071,000 bales, and thus the current stock is 3,090,000 bales below the five-year average.

The total stock in the United States at the end of October was 15,193,000 bales, compared with 14,546,000 on the same date last year, an increase of 647,000. The stock abroad was 1,788,000 bales, compared with 2,749,000 last year, a decrease of 961,000.

Bankers Acceptances Increase $35,149,969

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—Following a small increase in September, the volume of bankers acceptances rose $35,149,969 during October to a total of $362,984,286 at the end of the month, the American Acceptance Council reports.

In spite of the September-October gains the present volume is nearly $200,000,000 below the acceptance total as of October 31, 1934.

Chain Store Sales Gain 11.74% in Year

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—A compilation by the investment firm of Merrill, Lynch & Co. shows aggregate sales of $230,856,586 during October for 24 chain organizations, including two mail order companies. This total was 11.74 per cent greater than the $206,589,844 of sales reported by the same concerns in October, 1934.

Retail Trade Expands With Cool Weather

Gains in Major Areas Range From 5 to 25 Per Cent.

New York, Dec. 1.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co. says:

"Reflecting more seasonable weather, retail trade has recently expanded materially. Gains ranging between 5 per cent and 25 per cent over year earlier figures have been reported in the major trading areas. Wholesale activity has likewise been stimulated.

"The fact that retail sales picked up substantially coincident with lower temperatures is a clear indication that the slackening of sales in October and early November was chiefly due to the weather.

"Present indications are that industrial production will also be satisfactory. Earlier forecasts that automobile output would be maintained at a high rate through the end of the year apparently will be realized. Assemblies this month, including passenger cars and trucks in this country and Canada, are expected to approach the previous November peak of 383,000 cars established in 1925. December operations are not likely to be more than moderately below those for November, and total production for the final quarter will probably run well above 900,000 cars and may attain 1,000,000 cars.

"The possibility of further gains in steel operations during the remaining weeks of this year has been considerably dimmed by the failure to advance finished steel prices. Recent increases in ingot production have been at least partly based on speculative buying, and with removal of this stimulus, steel activity will probably decline gradually during December."

New Lumber Orders Increase 5% in Week

New orders booked at lumber mills during the week ended November 23, increased nearly 5 per cent over the previous week, production of reporting mills was 1 per cent above, and mill shipments 7 per cent below the week ended November 16, according to the reports to the National Lumber Manfacturers Association from regional associations.

Reported lumber orders were 4 per cent below output and reported shipments were 17 per cent below production, compared with 6 per cent and 10 per cent below, respectively, the preceding week.

BigBankWarns Excess Reserve Should Be Cut

Signs Indicate Mopping Up Is Advisable, Says National City.

New York, Dec. 1.—The National City Bank in its December letter points out that cash reserves of the member banks increased by over $200,000,000 to $5,782,000,000, or about 113 per cent in excess of the legal requirements based on deposit liabilities.

"In dollars," says the bank, "the amount of 'excess' was $3,070,000,000, representing a potential reserve base capable of supporting an additional $30,000,000,000 or more of deposits, calculating on the basis of the usual rule-of-thumb ratio of something over $10 of deposits for every $1 of reserves. It is the existence of this huge volume of 'excess,' created in large part by the gold imports over the past two years, that has raised the issue of inflation.

"It is generally admitted that these great 'excess' reserves, if not controlled at the proper time, may constitute a serious menace for the future. During the discussions over the banking bill passed in the last Congress the inflation danger latent in these reserves was urged repeatedly by Government spokesmen as reasons for bringing about a greater centralization of control powers within the Federal Reserve system. As a result of the deliberations of Congress, the powers of the Reserve banks to act, and to act effectively, have been greatly strengthened.

Federal Board Powers.

"The authority of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve system over open market operations and discount policy has been increased, and the board has been given power to raise or lower reserve requirements within limits. It remains to be seen how successful we shall be in using this new machinery properly.

"Up to now, of course, the temper of the people has been such that there has been little attempt on the part of the general public to exploit in a dangerous way the great possibilities for credit expansion. Of late, however, there have been signs and symptoms that have led many careful students of the satuation to conclude that it would be wise to take some preliminary action in the form of mopping up a part of the 'excess' reserves, with the view, not of restricting credit, but merely of reducing the 'excess' to more manageable proportions, and so putting the credit control mechanism in a better strategic position for combating any unsound tendencies that might arise.

"It is argued that not a little of the buying in the stock market, while for cash, is nevertheless based on the belief that inflation is inevitable, and that a warning gesture made at this time might save a great deal of grief later."

Steel Activity At Year's Peak, But Prices Hold

Decision Against Raise Proves Surprise to Consumers.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 1.—Pressure for delivery of finished steel before January 1 has relaxed as the initial consequence of steelmakers' decision last week not to raise prices for first quarter, states the magazine Steel.

This decision came as a surprise even to district sales managers who had booked some speculative orders on the general assumption of an advance. A considerable portion of the tonnage, except in sheets and strip urgently required by automobile manufacturers, may be cancelled or deferred.

One explanation offered for the price policy finally adopted by leading interests is that some mills in efforts to accumulate heavy backlogs overstepped January 1 as a delivery deadline and engaged tonnage not intended for, or possible of shipment until first quarter, thus tending to make ineffective a general increase.

The decision favors the small buyer whose financial position does not permit him to stock up. Some steelmakers consider the action merely as a postponement of an advance which they feel sure must come some time in the first quarter.

Test in January.

On the other hand, the recent increase of $2 a ton on semifinished steel will not be tested until January, and nonintegrated mills already are pushing hard for a reduction.

The only price changes to develop out of the wide range that were discussed are an advance of $4 a ton on track spikes and $1 on track bolts. Beehive furnace coke has been increased 10 cents a ton, and the foundry grade reduced 10 cents.

At 56 per cent, steelworks operations last week were 1½ points up from the preceding week and highest this year. November as a whole averaged about 54.3 per cent, compared with 52.3 in February, the previous high this year, and 28.11 per cent in November, 1934. Actual ingot production for 11 months is approximately 28 per cent over the first 11 months last year.

Steel has been shipped from the mills at a fairly even rate throughout the year, one of the notable features of 1935; there having been no "poor" months as classified by steelmakers. With price uncertainties removed, December now promises to continue this record for steadiness.

Tobacco Averages.

New York, Dec. 1 (AP).—The price of U. S. type 12, grade B4F, flue-cured tobacco averaged 16.8 cents a pound this week, against 16.6 cents in the previous week, H. A. Stitch, tobacco statistician reports.

Hundreds Inspect New G. E. House

Among the hundreds of visitors to the General Electric "New American" home in Rollingwood, are many returning for a second visit to bring their friends and to examine at leisure the many details of the home's design, plan and equipment.

This house is built and presented by Waverly Taylor, Inc. It is located at Vale street and Rolling road and is sponsored by the General Electric Co. It is furnished and decorated by Woodward & Lothrop. The General Electric kitchen is furnished by the National Electrical Supply Co. and the General Electric air conditioning by the Hudson Air Conditioning Corporation.

The home will be open daily and Sunday from 9:30 a. m. to 9:30 p. m. It may be seen by driving out Sixteenth street northwest to Sherrill drive, opposite Walter Reed Hospital, thence to Beach drive and turning right 2 miles to the home sign at Leland street.

Norfolk Navy Building Is Urged Upon Swanson

Immediate replacement of wartime buildings at the Norfolk Naval Training Station was recommended to Secretary of the Navy Swanson yesterday by his Bureau of Navigation chief, according to the Associated Press.

The Secretary's attention was called to the fact that replacement of these buildings had been "urged" before, and that the recommendation was renewed. An itemized list of funds available to the bureau during the past fiscal year included $222,728 for the Norfolk Naval Training Station.

Farmer Is Near Death In Shooting Over Dog

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Philippi, W. Va., Dec. 1.—Willis Johnson, 40, Olive Hill farmer, is in a critical condition in a hospital here, suffering from gunshot wounds in his left side. Wence Newman, 30, of the same section, is held in the county jail pending outcome of the shooting.

Officers said Newman told them he shot Johnson after Johnson kicked Newman's dog.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

FUNCTIONS and objectives of the 3,600 employes at Soil Conservation Service, who will soon go under civil service, embrace a program to correct one of the greatest abuses to American national resources.

BAKER.

The work of the service is divided into 140 soil-erosion demonstration projects. Demonstration areas average approximately 25,000 acres each in size and include representative farm and grazing lands in various sections of each of 42 States. The project areas were selected after investigation by experts of the service and State agricultural agencies on the basis of erosion conditions, willingness of farmers to co-operate in a demonstration program, and the suitablity of the area for demonstration purposes. Consideration also was given to the availability of relief-roll labor in each vicinity.

Work in the project areas involves the application of a complete land-use program, designed to curb the destruction of soil resources by wind and water erosion and to minimize flood hazards by controlling a run-off of rain water.

Terracing, strip cropping, forestation, contour cultivation, gully checking and other effective measures of erosion control are employed either singly or in combination, depending on the requirements of each type of land.

Work is carried on in co-operation with farm owners and operators in the project area and close co-operation is maintained with State and local agricultural agencies. The closest co-operation also is maintained with other governmental agencies concerned in conservation work or concerned in any of the activities conducted by the service in its program.

Briefly, the service operates on private land as follows:

Through a co-operative agreement voluntarily signed by the individual farmer, the service agrees to set up a land-sue and cropping plan for each particular field and definite acreage on the farm. It agrees to provide technical assistance and furnish whatever supplementary labor and materials are necessary to do a good job.

In return, the farmer agrees to follow, for a five-year period, the program outlined for his farm by the technical men of the service and furnish as far as possible the necessary labor and materials.

W. H. W. Komp, entomologist of the Public Health Service, has lately returned from Colombia, where he spent three months on a mosquito survey for the Rockefeller Foundation in connection with the problem of jungle yellow fever

Farm Economics Report.

Activities of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics during the past year have covered a wide range from emergency drought surveys and the listing of feed supplies to specific economic research on complicated current problems, says Dr. A. G. Black in his annual report today made public.

"One of the outstanding achievements of the bureau during the year," says Dr. Black, "was the publication of the study entitled 'Economic and Social Problems and Conditions of the Southern Appalachians.' Another important study reached the public in the land-utilization and land-policy section of the report of the national resources board."

The report emphasizes the work of the bureau's Division of Crop and Livestock Estimates in connection with the wheat, cotton and corn-hog programs of the AAA. The new Division of Marketing Research co-operated constantly with the Consumers' Counsel of the AAA.

Many other projects are reported on, including the national program of cotton research, studies in packaging cotton, research in types of farming, detailed study of wheat farming, index of world industrial production and economic effects of AAA marketing agreements and processing taxes.

MRS. ARTHUR E. WILKIN, of Treasury Department, formerly Miss Katherine Nimerfro, of Mankato, Minn., was married to Mr. Wilkin, National Bank Examiners Division, Treasury, Thanksgiving Day. The couple will be at home at Lynbrook, N. Y., after December 15, Mrs. Wilkin having resigned her Government position.

Geologist Advanced.

Dr. Donnel F. Hewett (P), has been appointed geologist in charge of the section of metalliferous deposits of the Geological Survey to succeed Dr. G. F. Loughlin, who is now chief geologist. Dr. Hewett has been with the Survey since 1911 and is an authority on economic geology, mineral economics and reserves, and manganese.

Smithsonian Personnel.

Royal H. Trembly, assistant superintendent of buildings and labor at the National Museum, has been advanced to the position of superintendent to succeed James S. Goldsmith, who recently was retired on account of age.

Other recent appointments at the Smithsonian Institution include the following: Bora G. Hyman and Perrow B. Rorer, guards, National Gallery of Art and National Museum, respectively; Everett Korthuis, assistant keeper, and Fred E. Grossman, carpenter, National Zoological Park; Carroll McKinley Martin and Francis T. Brady, messengers, National Museum.

The Department of Commerce has announced the perfection of an invention known as the "slinger ring" designed to feed a steady stream of anti-ice solution onto aircraft propellers, I. R. Metcalf, commerce engineer, is credited with having suggested the device. It has been thoroughly tested, and the department states that one airline has ordered 60 "slingers" for its 30 bimotor passenger planes.

White House Usher.

Q.—Who succeeded the late "Ike" Hoover as usher at the White House?—Maxine Watterson (C).

A.—Mr. Hoover was succeeded by Raymond D. Muir, who had been assistant usher.

Q.—How many persons are employed by the Department of Commerce?—Daniel W. Heald (P).

A.—About 10,000 in the field and 4,000 in Washington.

Patent Office.

Q.—How old is the Patent Office?—Agnes E. Lehrman (P).

A.—The first patent act was approved April 10, 1790, but the first organization of the Patent Bureau was in May, 1802, when President Jefferson appointed Dr. William Thornton superintendent of patents. The Patent Office was under the State Department until 1849, when it was transferred to Interior. It was transferred to Commerce on April 1, 1925.

Culbertson On Bridge

Game Raises.

When you raise your partner's opening one bid to game in his suit you do not show a hand which is as strong in honor tricks as when you give a double raise, even though you are bidding for one or two more tricks. A raise of a major suit from one to four, or of a minor suit from one to four or five, is a shutout bid. Its purpose is to keep the bidding so high that the opponents cannot safely bid. The requirements for a raise to four are five trumps, a singleton, and about one honor trick, but no more than one and one-half honor tricks. To raise a minor suit to five the hand should contain two singletons (that is, 6-5-1-1 distribution), or a void. Otherwise, raise your partner's minor suit only to four.

Suppose your partner has bid one spade. You should bid three spades with:

♠ J 10 7 5	♠ K Q 6 4	♠ Q 7 5 2
♥ 8	♥ K	♥ K 8 4
♦ Q J 6 2	♦ 7 6 4 3 2	♦ A 7 2
♣ A Q 6 3	♣ A J 6	♣ K Q 5

But bid four spades with:

♠ 9 8 7 5 3	♠ Q 8 6 5 3	♠ K 8 6 4 3
♥ 10	♥ 7 3	♥ 10
♦ K Q	♦ None	♦ 8 6
♣ 8 7 5 4 2	♣ J 8 6 5 3 2	♣ K Q 7 3 2

Squeezing the Dummy.

Many combined hands have the requisite tricks for the contract, but, due to intercommunication difficulties, care must be exercised in the order of their cashing.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 Club	Pass	1 Diamond	Pass
1 Spade	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T (final bid)

West chose to lead his fourth-best club despite North's opening club bid. Declarer won with the jack and led the club right back. The queen forced the ace, and now a diamond finesse was taken. West won with the king, and shifted to hearts. The king won, and a second diamond finesse placed the lead in the South hand. After the ace of diamonds was led declarer foresaw that if he continued the diamond suit, cashing two more diamonds and two heart tricks, he must inevitably squeeze the dummy out of either the spade or the club stopper. So he abandoned the diamond suit and played through West's spade ace. Fortune smiled on his proper technique, and the contract was made. Two clubs, three hearts, two diamonds and two spades gave him nine tricks.

Today's Question.

Question: My partner opened the bidding, first hand and vulnerable, with one spade. I held spades K 7 2, hearts A Q 4, diamonds A J 9, clubs K 10 7 4. What should I bid?

Answer: You should bid three no trump. Your 4-3-3-3 distribution and your 3½ plus honor tricks are admirably suited to this response.

CAMEL'S COSTLIER TOBACCOS

mean so much to others, we are sure you'll like them too! So—

Here's our "Try 10" Invitation!

When people try Camels, they like them. To their delight, they find a new mildness, a new flavor, a new smoke thrill!

This is no accident. It doesn't "just happen." For Camels are made by recognized specialists in the use of finer, more expensive tobaccos... past masters in the blending of leaf with leaf to bring out delicate flavor. And because of the matchless blending of these costlier tobaccos, Camels have a rich bouquet and aroma...a cool, delicious flavor that sets Camels apart...alone.

Convincing evidence of choice tobaccos

The best way to tell you what to expect from Camels is to say that Camels have given more people more pleasure than any other cigarette. And Camel smokers are frank in expressing their preference for Camel's costlier tobaccos. They speak from experience. What they say is convincing evidence of Camel's appealing qualities. So now we ask you to make a test. See our money-back offer? You can't lose! Just give Camels a chance—and see if they don't open up a whole new world of smoking pleasure.
